FROM THE PRESIDENT

THE TREE OF LIFE THAT IS GOSHEN COLLEGE

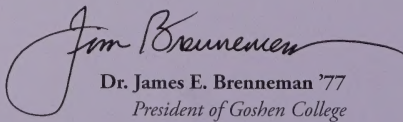

The story that is Goshen College has always contained within it the narrative seeds of the vision described in Scripture: a "tree of life, bearing twelve kinds of fruit ... with leaves for the healing of the nations" (Revelation 22:2). Not one, not two, not six, but 12 kinds of fruit. All on one tree. Truly it is a tree of life!

In our early sapling years, the fruit of our alma mater was largely one or two kinds, predominantly first- or second-generation Mennonite college students with similar gene pools and common cultural experiences. Goshen College was, indeed, an amazing, rich, nourishing tree of life for many students, as it is now, many generations later.

But even then, we were not satisfied or complete because, as the Harlem Renaissance poet Eugenia W. Collier wrote, "there were buds that could not bloom at all/ In light, but crumple, piteous, and fall." We would wait, knowing it could be better. And each new generation, each new era, every new group of students, faculty and leaders would nurture the vision. And so it would be the spiritual destiny of Goshen College, to bear more and varied kinds of fruit.

It has been a joy seeing the fruition of years of labor, especially in recent years as we have added to our rich tree. Our international and intercultural student population has almost doubled to 28 percent of the student body. Our Latino student population in particular has nearly tripled over the last eight years and is now 15 percent of the student body. If the fastest growing segment of high school graduates in the next 20 years is going to be from the Latino community, the college has positioned itself to be the best college in our region and beyond for these students to call home too. Deep systemic changes have been made in our curriculum, human resource training, in admissions, financial aid, student life, bridge programs, family orientation programs, all to nurture this life giving fruitful tree.

Our tree is only 120 years old, and in God's time, the best of our fruit-bearing years still lie ahead of us. A Goshen College that bears not just one, not two, not six, but 12 kinds of fruit, stands better prepared to bring "healing to the nations" and to reconcile gaps in our understanding of each other than ever before. In so doing, we embody the tree of life right here, right now, on the banks of the Elkhart River.

ABOUT THE COVER

What does a typical Goshen College student look like? Imagine with us! Pulling together slices of portraits of 15 current students (taken by Brian Yoder Schlabach '07) – traditional and non-traditional undergraduates, as well as our graduate students – our graphic designer Hannah Gerig Meyer '08 created this collage to give us a glimpse and a suggestion. But, the reality is that Goshen College students have never – fortunately – fit neatly into any typical molds. Meet some of these students on page 19.

FIND MENNO

Menno Simons might have enjoyed reading former president Shirley H. Showalter's new memoir, "Blush." We heard from 51 of you who correctly found Menno in the fall 2013 issue on page 17, listening to Showalter read from her memoir during Homecoming Weekend.

We love hearing from all of you as you find where Menno is hiding (he looks just like the photo at the top, just smaller). So, when you do, submit your entry to gcbulletin@goshen.edu by June 1, 2014, for a chance to win. Be sure to include your name, address, T-shirt size and graduation year/affiliation with Goshen College.

CORRESPONDENCE

Send your letters of response to the Bulletin to gcbulletin@goshen.edu or to Goshen College Bulletin, 1700 S. Main St., Goshen, IN 46526.

I loved this issue of the Bulletin: all the colored photos throughout, especially in the alumni section, and the good articles, especially about the Steiners and Isaac, who are from my church; Mary Oyer, my favorite professor; and Lois Gunden Clemens, my French teacher at GC.

Marian E. Hostetler '54, Goshen, Ind.

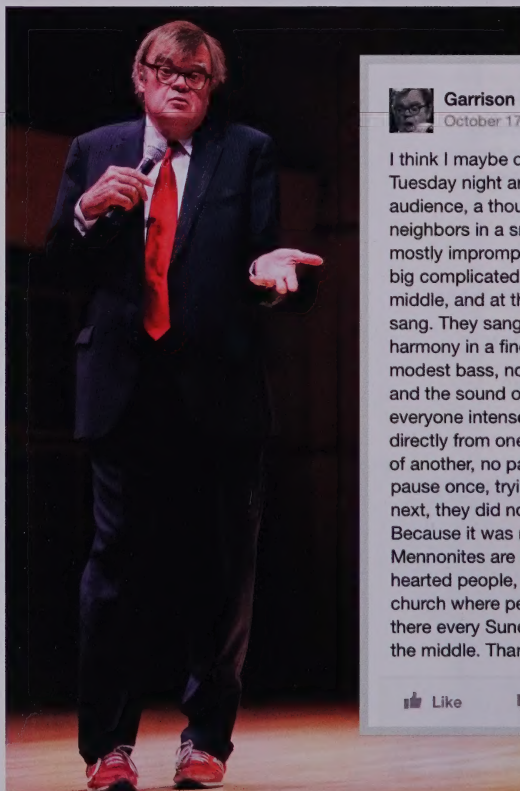

This is a wonderful publication and I enjoy each issue. Mary K. Oyer was one of my professors and I am continually amazed at her abilities to reach every student with musical knowledge and then remember the names of those students for many years.

Maretta Buller '64, North Newton, Kan.

I enjoyed the story about Dr. Mary Oyer, and as for so many others, recalled some of my culture shock in the Intro to Fine Arts class. However, it left lasting appreciations I would not have received in any other way. Thanks for all your good work in putting together the Bulletin. I look forward to each issue.

I think I maybe did the best show of my life Tuesday night and all thanks to the audience, a thousand Mennonites and their neighbors in a small town in Indiana. It was mostly impromptu, fast-paced, jumpy, with a big complicated pontoon-boat story in the middle, and at the beginning and end we sang. They sang beautiful four- and six-part harmony in a fine acoustic hall and I sang a modest bass, no arm waving, no coaxing, and the sound of this impromptu choir made everyone intensely happy. I steered them directly from one verse of a song to a chorus of another, no pausing, and when I did pause once, trying to figure out where to go next, they did not applaud. Marvellous. Because it was not a show. It was for real. Mennonites are quiet, peace-loving, kind-hearted people, salt of the earth. If I knew a church where people sang like that, I'd be there every Sunday, sitting right smack in the middle. Thank you, Goshen College.

SPRING BREAK IS A TIME TO SERVE FOR MANY STUDENTS

Several GC students stayed in Goshen during their spring break, braving the cold weather to volunteer with Habitat for Humanity of Elkhart County. A handful of students and staff spent the week putting up drywall and insulation in a house for a family in need.

"You're supposed to love your neighbor," said Angeliky Santos (left), a junior youth ministry and history major from Goshen. "Even if it's cold and not as fun, that's what you're supposed to do. You're supposed to sacrifice and not conform, and try to help."

GENERATIONS COME TOGETHER DURING INAUGURAL GRANDPARENTS DAY

More than 40 students welcomed their grandparents to Goshen College for the first annual Grandparents Day in November. Approximately 100 grandparents spent the day visiting and seeing their grandchildren's college experience first-hand. The day included breakfast, a reception with Goshen College President Jim Brenneman, classes, lunch, campus tour and other optional activities.

NEW ALL-CAMPUS BAND WILL PROVIDE MORE OPPORTUNITIES FOR STUDENTS

A new all-campus band will provide a fresh musical outlet for Goshen College students starting in the fall of 2014. The band, which will be an inclusive, non-auditioned ensemble, will perform in concert and serve as a pep band for select athletic and other campus events.

Drawing on the region's strong high school band culture, the all-campus band will provide new opportunities for wind, brass and percussion musicians. Christopher Fashun, assistant professor of music, will direct the band.

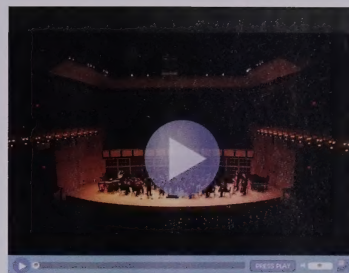

FESTIVAL OF CAROLS AVAILABLE ON DVD

Thanks to Goshen College's FiveCore Media production company, the 2013 Festival of Carols, GC's annual Christmas extravaganza, will be available on DVD. The 2013 program will also air next Christmas on WNIT, the local PBS station.

Capturing a performance like Festival of Carols is no small task. It took nine camera locations, several hundred feet of cables, 11 student crew members, three days of shooting and many months of post-production, all for an incredible 74-minute program. The result is magic.

DVDs cost $15, and can be purchased by calling the Music Center at (574) 535-7361.

LIVE STREAM BRINGS WORLD-CLASS PERFORMANCES TO LIVING ROOMS

In an effort to better serve students and their distant families, as well as alumni and friends of GC, the Music Center has begun live-streaming select music department concerts from Sauder Concert Hall. These performances are only viewable during the actual concert. The live webcam and a list of upcoming concerts that will be streamed can be found at goshen.edu/music/livestream.

SUMMER MUSIC WEEK RETURNS

Music Week, a beloved week-long summer extravaganza for high school choral and instrumental students, will be held June 15-21, 2014, on campus. Artistic directors for the camp are Christopher Fashun, assistant professor of music, and Scott Hochstetler '97, associate professor of music.

Music Week, which was held annually during the 1980s and 1990s, will include individual and joint rehearsal times for up to 60 choral singers and instrumental players. Events will include global music electives in Brazilian drumming, world music singing styles and more. The week will culminate with a free public concert in the Music Center's Sauder Concert Hall.

WOMEN'S WORLD MUSIC CHOIR TOURS PENNSYLVANIA

The Women's World Music Choir spent their spring break touring and performing in churches and schools throughout Pennsylvania. The tour theme was "Songline: Community, Identity, Blessing," featuring music that celebrates the sustaining power of community, blessing and identity through taught and shared song.

The music originated from places such as Yemen, Iraq, New Zealand, Mali, South Africa, Spain, Russia, the American South and Appalachia, and the choir performed songs in ten different languages.

"Most of the songs center on work that women do in the world as makers of peace, creators and builders of families, experiences as daughters, brides, wives, mothers, leaders of communities," said Deb Brubaker '79, professor of music and director of the choir.

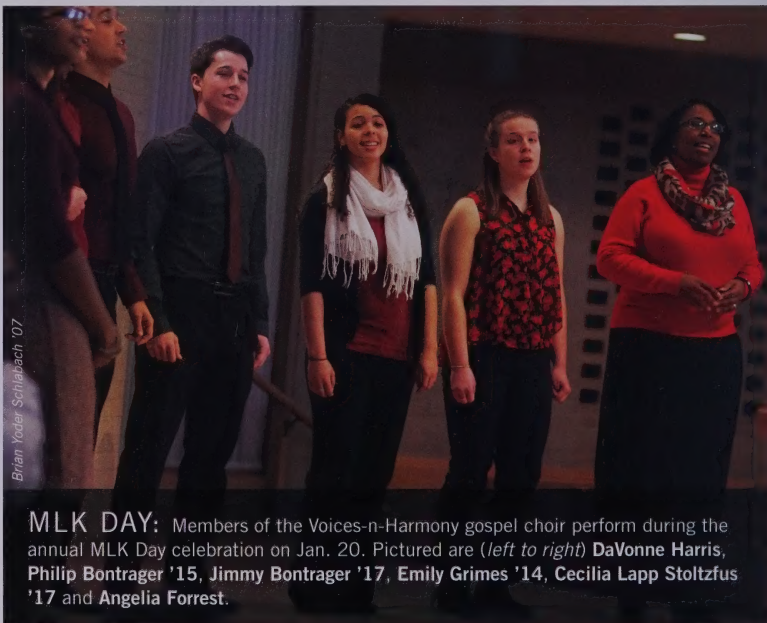

TEMPERATURE DROP CAUSES THIRD AND FOURTH SNOW DAYS IN CAMPUS HISTORY

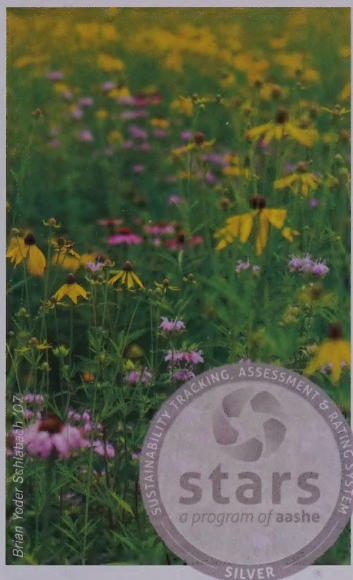

Goshen College doesn't shut down campus very often. Prior to this year, it closed on Feb. 2, 2011 and during the "Great Blizzard of 1978" (top photo).

The 2014 winter proved exceptionally bitter on more than one occasion. For the first week of classes this semester, students struggled to get to campus while temperatures were around -40 degrees with wind chill, forcing Elkhart County to declare a state of emergency and closing campus for a day and a half. A few weeks later, on Jan. 27, the county declared another state of emergency due to extreme temperatures and snow, compelling GC to close campus for the fourth time in history due to weather.

GC EARNS SILVER FOR COMMITMENT TO SUSTAINABILITY

The college recently earned a silver rating from the Sustainability Tracking, Assessment and Rating System (STARS) report, which recognizes colleges and universities for their commitment to sustainable practices on campus. Between 2008 and 2013, the campus reduced its carbon footprint by an estimated 22 percent. In the spring of 2013, the college took the further step of purchasing 100 percent of its electricity from renewable sources. The college is one of only seven colleges and universities in Indiana to have earned a STARS silver or gold rating.

The campus has also converted nearly 20 percent of its lawn space to native plants and prairie restoration. Students and staff have developed a food composting system, planted a community garden, built a solar hot water collection system and continued to reduce energy consumption campus-wide.

STUDENT CREATES FREE GC IPAD APP

Goshen College recently launched a new, free iPad app developed by Clayton Pelfrey, a senior informatics major from Middlebury, Ind.

Among the many features are quick links to the college's social media, fun facts about the college, a listing of local churches, an interactive campus map, dining hall menu, events calendar and campus news. An iPhone version is very close to being available, and an Android version of the app is in development.

Find the app by searching "Goshen College" in your iPad's app store.

LILLY ENDOWMENT AWARDS $1 MILLION GRANT TO PREPARE STUDENTS FOR CAREERS

Goshen College received a $1 million grant from Lilly Endowment Inc. to help establish stronger career counseling, foster student entrepreneurship and promote internships and other experiential learning opportunities.

The grant, which is part of the Endowment's "Initiative to Promote Opportunities Through Educational Collaborations," is meant to boost efforts to enhance and expand opportunities for college graduates to find meaningful employment in Indiana.

"This grant will help us continue to prepare our students with real world experience and skill development, which makes a difference to future employers," said Jim Brenneman, president of Goshen College.

SPEECH ON 'THE WELCOME TABLE' WINS PEACE ORATORICAL CONTEST

Five Goshen College students gave speeches about issues close to their hearts during the college's 2014 C. Henry Smith Peace Oratorical Contest on Feb. 18. Speaking on "The welcome table: Discussing Goshen College's hiring policy," Abby Deaton (left), a junior communication major from Indianapolis, won the top prize of $500 and a chance to enter her speech in the bi-national intercollegiate oratorical contest. Her speech highlighted the college's current hiring practices, which do not include hiring people in covenanted, same-sex relationships.

Martin Hofkamp, a senior peace, justice and conflict studies major from Peabody, Kan., was runner-up, speaking on "Juveniles in adult prisons." Drawing on his own experiences working with incarcerated youth in Elkhart County, Hofkamp informed the audience of young people who are being tried as adults and their struggles to reach their full potential.

Coming in third place, Lauren Treiber, a senior peace, justice and conflict studies major from Grand Rapids, Mich., spoke on "A case for faith-feminism: Women are disciples too."

INTERNATIONAL STUDENTS GIVE GOSHEN A TASTE OF HOME

The International Student Club (ISC) provided dinner and a show during their annual coffeehouse in March. The performance showcased the cultures of international students on campus, who come from more than 30 countries. The event also served as a fundraiser for international student scholarship assistance and a percentage of the earnings from the dinner and show went to Faith Victory Association in Rwanda, which provides orphans, women and minors a safe haven, education and other opportunities.

Performances from the evening included music, dances and presentations from Bulgaria, China, East Africa, India, Korea (above), Mongolia, Nepal, New Zealand, Norway, Rwanda, South and Central America, and Trinidad and Tobago.

STUDENTS CONNECT IN NEW CAMPUS-WIDE MENTORING PROGRAM

Last September, Student Senate launched a peer-to-peer mentoring program designed to build bridges between upper and underclassmen. The idea emerged during campus conversations about social divisions.

The aim of the program is to get students out of their normal social circles by pairing them with peers they might not otherwise have a chance to meet – specifically, students in different classes. First-year students are partnered with juniors, while sophomores are matched with seniors. A survey and conversations with participants confirmed that many partners met on a semi-regular basis or at least felt happy that they got to know someone new.

STUDENTS CREATE PLAN FOR FLORIDA AMISH COMMUNITY

A team of Goshen College students spent part of their spring semester in Sarasota, Fla., creating a master plan for the Amish community of Pinecraft. The team was made up of Niles Graber Miller (left), a senior from Goshen, Emma Ruth (right), a senior from Harleysville, Pa., and Hans Weaver '13 (middle), from New Holland, Pa. Norm Kauffmann '62, former Goshen College dean of students, oversaw the project.

Pinecraft started as a campground for Amish visiting Sarasota in the 1920s. Now, the community has grown into a small village with paved streets, houses, churches, restaurants and a post office. Because of the spontaneous nature of Pinecraft's growth, there are concerns about safety, building permits, land use and ordinance codes. The plan that the students created will preserve and enhance the Pinecraft community's cultural heritage for future generations.

"As the Pinecraft board comes up with concerns that they have for this community, as well as hopes and plans for the future, we are helping to make those things feasible," Ruth said.

THE NUMBERS DON'T LIE:

For Goshen College accounting students, experience means success

BY BRIAN YODER SCHLABACH '07

For major accounting firms, there just aren't enough students like Corine Alvarez '14.

She's on the Dean's List, plays tennis, has international experience, has had multiple internship and job experiences and has won student business awards. To sum it up, she's a pretty typical Goshen College accounting student.

That's one of the reasons accounting firms are knocking at Goshen College's door. Three of the top 10 accounting firms in the country recruit students directly from the college, as do regional and local firms. It helps that the college has one of the only regional accounting programs with a required, paid internship, which usually leads to a job offer.

"We are able to place nearly 100 percent of senior accounting majors in job-track internships every year," Michelle Horning '91, professor of accounting at Goshen College, said. "Our accounting program can't have enough students. Firms regularly ask, 'Are there any more?'"

Alvarez is one of three accounting students who began her senior year with a job already in place for after graduation. She will move to Chicago to work for Deloitte, one of the largest accounting firms in the world. Five other senior accounting students all have job-offer track internships, which means that they too will be offered jobs if all goes well. To sweeten the deal, starting salaries can be upward of $50,000 a year.

"Our alumni network is strong and close knit and has helped us make inroads to the various CPA firms in Indianapolis and Chicago as well as keeping the local ties strong," said Russ Rupp '82, professor of accounting at the college.

"It's a great feeling to have a job already lined up, which surprises many non-business students who are wondering what the future has in store for them," Alvarez said. "But, my case is not unique. My graduating class already has numerous job offers and internships lined up for this spring."

Currently, she's studying for the Certified Public Accountant (CPA) exam, which GC students tend to pass at rates well above the national average. In fact, the Goshen College accounting program is ranked 10th nationally for a program of its size and second in Indiana, based on 2011 CPA exam passing rates for graduates.

REAL WORLD EXPERIENCE

Alvarez's family moved between Puerto Rico, the Philippines and Texas before settling in Goshen when she was in the seventh grade. Her parents are both Goshen College alumni (Jim Alvarez '84 and Diane Beam '84), and her older sister (Sara Alvarez '12) attended as well.

"My journey to Goshen College was a fairly easy decision for me," Alvarez said. "Staying in Goshen for college near my family was a big pull for me, and the fact that my parents both went to Goshen didn't hurt."

Alvarez originally wanted to study history, but after her academic adviser recommended she take a finance course, she realized that she really enjoyed accounting work and could see herself working in the field.

"My advisor's whim turned into my career," she said.

Since declaring her major, there has been no shortage of hands-on opportunities. As a sophomore, Alvarez helped with an audit of a local camp and received an entrepreneurship grant to create her own bookkeeping business. As a junior, she prepared individual tax returns for community members through the IRS Volunteer Income Tax Assistance program. She has also completed three internships in both public and private accounting.

"I am lucky in that I have had multiple internship experiences during my college career," she said. "I learned a ton about the internal workings of a 'Big Four' accounting firm. I was offered a full-time position at the end of my (most recent) internship to begin the summer after I graduate."

Three of the top 10 accounting firms in the country recruit students directly from the college, as do regional and local firms.

In October, accounting firms made their annual visit to the college to interview accounting majors for internships and post-graduation jobs. "Goshen is one of the few small schools in Northern Indiana that the accounting firms will visit," Horning said. "Other colleges have created a shared recruiting event to try and attract accounting firms to their students, but so far, GC doesn't participate in that event, because accounting firms want GC students and come here to interview them."

According to Doug Nisley '80, a partner at Crowe Horwath LLP, which routinely hires Goshen College graduates, firms look for students who take initiative, have real-world experience and can think on their feet. GC students fit the bill.

"We look for a well-rounded person who has excellent interpersonal skills as well as a broad range of knowledge," Nisley said. "Our clients reside across the United States as well as internationally. Travel to our clients often puts our professionals in new and varying cultural settings. GC grads, due to their liberal arts education, as well as the intercultural experience they have on Study-Service Term, are very well-rounded. They have shown an excellent work ethic and common sense."

LEARNING BEYOND THE CLASSROOM

Alvarez's experiences outside the traditional classroom are part of what makes her and other students like her, as Nisley puts it, "well-rounded."

"I have had many opportunities to travel. I've studied in Peru for my Study-Service Term, taken a history course in Spain and Morocco, and a business course in Barcelona," Alvarez said. "All of these courses and experiences have made the learning in the classroom more real. We talk about international differences in business, why not go to Spain and see them first hand? Getting to travel abroad in small groups has been an integral part of my learning experience."

In addition to studying abroad, Alvarez has been involved with various student organizations, participated in both intercollegiate and intramural athletics, and has won business competitions and awards.

"There are so many clubs and organizations that all are welcome to join here, which may seem more intimidating at a larger university. It's easy to get involved," she said. "The atmosphere at Goshen is very community focused – if I don't recognize someone in passing in the cafeteria or on the sidewalk, I am genuinely surprised."

UNIQUE NEW MBA PROGRAM WILL SHAPE LEADERS FOR THE COMMON GOOD

Goshen College has joined with Bluffton University and Eastern Mennonite University to launch The Collaborative MBA to shape transformative leaders.

The program will be geared toward the well-being of people, community and planet, and will situate making profits within the context of ethical practices and contribution to the common good. Students will attend one week of residential courses at one of the three colleges, experience a week in an international setting and complete coursework online and via video conferencing. The 36 credit hour program will result in a master of business administration degree in one of eight different concentrations, including leadership, health care management, accounting and financial management, conflict transformation, sustainability, intercultural leadership or a self-designed path.

"We're interested in developing authentic leaders who understand that personal, business, organizational and community existence and success are tied to the sustainability of local and global systems," said Jim Smucker '84, The Collaborative MBA's program director.

MAPLE LEAFS

Athletes give back through Leaf Relief

Stephanie Miller

Originally created in 2008, the Leaf Relief program was designed to unify the Goshen College Athletic Department – more than 300 student-athletes, coaches and staff – to lead an effort to serve others in the spirit of Goshen College and its core values, which include servant leadership. It gives student-athletes a chance to make a difference in tangible ways and “give back” to the community.

The three main focuses of the project involve community service, raising awareness for worthy causes and raising funds for humanitarian efforts. Over the past six years, thousands of dollars have been raised for charities and teams have done projects in multiple states, as well as sent funds and supplies to multiple countries. Here is a look at some of the most recent projects.

LYMPHOMA AWARENESS NIGHT

The Maple Leafs held a special “Stand Up To Cancer” awareness night at a men’s basketball game, raising awareness and funds for the Leukemia and Lymphoma Society. They also pulled off an emotional win over Taylor with many in attendance “standing up” for Men’s Basketball Head Coach Neal Young, who is currently undergoing treatment for T-cell lymphoma.

FEED MY STARVING CHILDREN

The baseball team worked with Feed My Starving Children, an organization that sends food to nearly 70 countries worldwide. They served at a MobilePack location in Nappanee, Ind., putting together meals. “This was a great opportunity for our guys to contribute to something so much bigger than themselves and they greatly enjoyed the experience,” head coach Alex Childers said.

GREENCROFT CHRISTMAS

The women’s basketball team hosted a holiday party for residents at Greencroft Retirement Community in Goshen. They decorated cookies, participated in Christmas themed games and sang Christmas carols. “Service work is so important because it’s our way of giving back to a community that has given so much to us,” said sophomore Liz Tecca of Parchment, Mich. “We are beyond blessed in our lives at Goshen College and getting the opportunity to spend some time with the people at Greencroft allowed us to show our appreciation.”

READING IN SCHOOLS

Student-athletes from multiple sports (soccer, tennis, volleyball and basketball) were part of “Reading Day” at Concord Southside Elementary School. They read books to dozens of children and also had a chance to play their respective sports with them. Several student-athletes also took part in “Real Men Read,” a similar program in the Goshen schools.

GOSHEN SCHOOLS HEALTH DAY

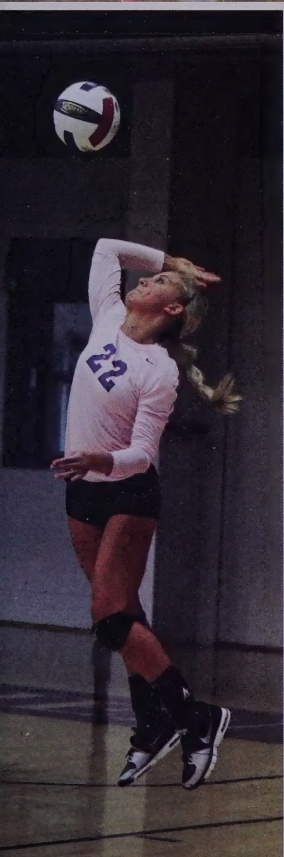

Led by student-athletes, a group teamed with the college’s kinesiology department to put on a health day at Goshen Community Schools. The group educated Goshen families on wellness, created opportunities to increase fitness, increased awareness of community partners and resources, and led education efforts on healthy nutrition opportunities in family life.

CROSS COUNTRY SERVICE DAYS

While teams prepared for competition, the cross country team spent several days of their pre-season training doing service. Among their projects, they helped out around campus pulling weeds and clearing invasive species, and worked with The Window packaging supplies for those in need.

FREE BASKETBALL CLINICS

During the preseason, the men’s basketball team performed free basketball clinics at Prairie View and Chandler Elementary Schools.

ARE YOU READY TO TURN A NEW LEAF? NEW MAPLE LEAF LOGO COMING SOON!

You'll see more in the next issue of the Bulletin, but in the meantime, anyone who can correctly identify the individual in this vintage "G" jacket will receive an original Goshen College Athletics T-shirt. Send your submissions to Assistant Athletic Director for Communication Josh Gleason at joshag@goshen.edu.

CROSS COUNTRY

The GC men finished in the top three at the Crossroads League Championships for the third consecutive year (3rd). Freshman Ryan Smith (Albion, Ind.) won three individual event titles and shattered a 33-year-old school record in the 8K (25:19). He qualified for the NAIA National Championships in Vancouver, Wash., where he ran the fastest time (25:34) in program history at the national meet. Along with Smith, sophomore Lucas Harnish (Bluffton, Ohio) also earned all-league honors, finishing 13th at the league championships (27:28). The GC women improved one spot from last year, taking seventh in the Crossroads League. Junior Mollie Nebel (Hesston, Kan.) was the top finisher, taking 24th (19:49).

Junior Missy Mackowiak (North Liberty, Ind.) earned her third-straight all-conference honor. The libero was named Second Team All-Crossroads League and is just 17 digs short of the program's all time record of 1,850. Junior Melanie Meyer (Elkhart, Ind.) was also selected as All-Crossroads League Honorable Mention after leading the team with 301 kills.

MEN'S SOCCER (6-11-2, 3-4-2 CL)

The Maple Leafs finished fifth in the league standings, an improvement of four spots from the previous year. Seniors Caleb Frey (Shipshewana, Ind.) and Khavoir Graham (Arima, Trinidad and Tobago) were both selected to the all-league teams. Goshen sits just one short of 500 all-time wins, looking to become just the second four-year institution in the state of Indiana and the fifth program in the NAIA to reach 500 victories.

WOMEN'S SOCCER (8-10, 2-7 CL)

In head coach Dale Stoltzfus' ('84) first season, the Maple Leafs won their most total games since the 1998 season. Seniors Dana Christner (Goshen, Ind.) and Emily Fretz (Centennial, Colo.) finished tied for seventh in program history with 16 career goals.

MEN'S TENNIS (5-7, 3-5 CL)

Sophomore Balasz Pirot (Herczeghalom, Hungary) equaled the program's single-season best with 16 victories at the No. 1 singles position.

WOMEN'S TENNIS (2-11, 0-8 CL)

ACADEMIC AWARDS

The Goshen College Athletic Department received a total of 23 NAIA Scholar-Athlete awards this fall, just six short of the program record set in 2009-10. Recipients have junior or senior academic status and a cumulative grade point average of at least 3.5.

Goshen College excels at preparing students for doctoral degrees

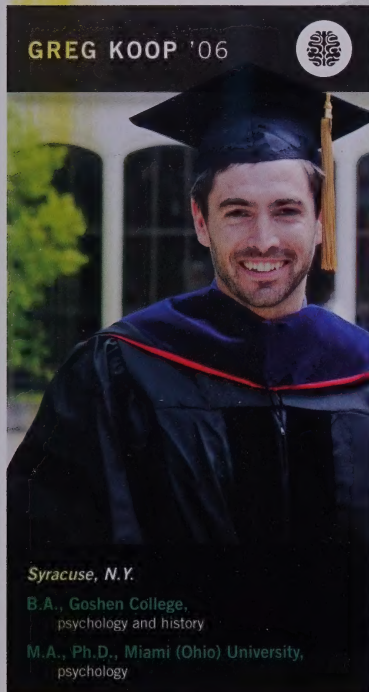

When it comes to earning a doctoral degree, Goshen College students have an advantage. At GC, students have more opportunities for undergraduate research, have smaller classes and build relationships with top-notch professors both in and out of the classroom.

In fact, among both public and private Indiana institutions, Goshen College ranks second in the number of graduates who go on to earn doctorates when institutional size (enrollment) is taken into account* (check out the graph at left). Nationally, GC ranks 87th out of 262 baccalaureate institutions. Among Mennonite institutions, GC leads the pack with twice as many students earning doctorates than any other institution. In the last 50 years, more than half of the students who have earned doctoral degrees earned them in the sciences. We'd like to introduce you to a few of them.

*Data is from the National Science Foundation's Survey of Earned Doctorates. Data include doctorates earned between 1990-2010 by graduates

A postdoctoral researcher in the Memory Modeling Lab at Syracuse University, Greg Koop has delved deeply into the field of memory and decision making. The decision to study psychology didn't come easily for Greg, but as they say, the apple doesn't fall far from the tree. Greg's father, Vic Koop, taught psychology at Goshen College for 27 years, retiring in 2009.

When did you know that you wanted to pursue the highest level of education?

"Following college I completed a year with Mennonite Voluntary Service. I was fairly certain that I would not end up in psychology. However, I soon came to miss the empirical, scientific perspective that had characterized the psychology department at Goshen. The projects I proposed at my service location all utilized the skills I learned as a psychology major, which I took as an indication that work in psychology was really something I wanted to do for a career."

How did Goshen College prepare you for your current work? "When I first arrived in graduate school I was fairly intimidated by the pedigree of some of my classmates, but I soon realized that the breadth of knowledge I gained at Goshen was at least comparable to that of my classmates from large research institutions. My liberal arts background made me thoroughly prepared for graduate work in psychology. The time and attention given to students by the faculty at Goshen is truly a unique opportunity for undergraduates, and it is fantastic preparation for the close advisor-advisee relationship in graduate school."

What is a piece of advice you would give to someone who is heading into your field?

"Some of the best advice I received before applying to graduate school was that I had to have "fire in the belly" about my chosen discipline. Graduate school in any area is a lot of hard work with delayed gratification, so undertaking such an endeavor is almost impossible without some passion for the field."

SAM GAMEDA '75

Addis Ababa, Ethiopia

B.A., Goshen College, physics

B.A., M.A., Ph.D., McGill University, agricultural engineering

A senior research fellow with the International Food Policy Research Institute (IFPRI), Sam Gameda works with the Ethiopian Agricultural Transformation Agency (ATA) to direct its Soil Health and Fertility Program. He's been in Ethiopia for the past two and a half years, helping find sustainable solutions to end hunger and poverty.

What gives you the most satisfaction in your work? "Through our soil mapping process we were able to identify nutrient deficiencies, which are changing the way we use fertilizers in Ethiopia. This is already showing tremendous promise for small farmers, increasing crop yields in some cases by more than 50 percent over current practices."

How did Goshen College prepare you for your current work? "I value the education I got at Goshen College – I think everyone should have a liberal arts education. Goshen taught me to think critically. Goshen embraced both education and training as important aspects to build in its students."

What is a piece of advice you would give to someone who is heading into your field? "The challenges that we'll be facing in the coming years and decades will be daunting. One of the areas that will be of great concern, particularly in the developing world, is the challenge of food security, particularly in the context of climate change. This will be even more challenging as it cuts across many regions and countries, requiring inter-regional and international actions. I hope there are Goshen students who are ready to take on these challenges, and to commit to the learning, as well as time, energy and patience needed to successfully address them."

An emergency veterinarian, Abbie Gascho Landis provides medical care for a range of pets. Her patients include sick or injured dogs and cats, and often their worried owners too. Her work requires her whole body and mind.

What gives you the most satisfaction in your work? "While I love solving diagnostic puzzles and delight in healing, I'm most satisfied by connecting with people at the point of their bond with an animal. My position often creates a space where people are open with me about their concerns and their lives. I try to be fully present with people and their animals, especially in the most raw moments. I believe that stories shared can be transformative."

When did you first know that you wanted to be a veterinarian? "Ever since I was a kid nursing my sick sheep Bertha back to health, I've wanted to be a veterinarian. In high school, I was lucky enough to have several great veterinary mentors, who helped me along. I never relished science, though, until much later. At Goshen College, I majored in English because I loved it, and biology because I needed it to become a veterinarian. Somewhere in the eight years of college and veterinary school, science captured my imagination. Now I'm hooked."

What is a piece of advice you would give to someone who is heading into your field? "Find a mentor. Pursue experiences that develop your ability to think critically and to communicate effectively and empathetically with people. Enjoy learning and engage your curiosity."

KAREN KING '87

Denver, Colo.

B.A., Goshen College, biology

Ph.D., Rush University, biochemistry

A research scientist, Karen King runs the Orthopedics Molecular Biology Laboratory at the University of Colorado, studying the musculoskeletal system, specifically degenerative joint diseases like arthritis, to develop better prevention and treatment strategies.

What are the biggest changes you've seen in your field since you started? "The advances in the way we study genes and cells have so accelerated what we are able to do in the laboratory. I actually made and analyzed DNA sequencing gels in graduate school, and now we just ship samples off for someone else with an automated machine to sequence DNA far, far faster and cheaper. Practically, the funding for research in the United States has dropped greatly – this has and will further decelerate scientific advances in this country."

How did Goshen College prepare you for your current work? "As a student in a liberal arts college, I was able to delay a restrictive major of study. That meant I could take more literature courses, which in turn meant a lot of writing. While science is my career, there is so much writing required in this job. I thank the English department for developing those necessary skills in me. Goshen College also encouraged me to think for myself. Independence is very important for a research scientist."

What is one way that you'd like to change the world? "Getting others excited about solving problems in health and disease excites me. I'd like to help raise the role and authority of women in the sciences. Any chance I get, I tell young girls: "Math is important and physics is fun." Of course, this is good advice for anyone, not just girls."

Anna Lizama Clark's mission in life is to provide the best medical treatment possible to racially, ethnically and economically disadvantaged people. With a focus in obstetrics and gynecology, she is an active volunteer, serving people around the world and educating the public about health care issues. She recently enrolled in a Master in Public Health program at the University of South Florida.

When did you first know that you wanted to pursue the highest level of education?

"I worked as a nurse for eight years on surgical floors, in the neonatal ICU for five years, and as a nurse educator and quality manager in OB/GYN. But nursing made me yearn for higher knowledge and authority. So at age 31, I entered medical school."

What is your personal mission in your own work? "Over the years, I have actively participated in the work process of health care through medical missions locally and globally, held leadership roles in organizations and volunteers with Doctors for America (DEA) and with Shepherds Hope, a free clinic for the uninsured. With the Central Florida Partnership on Health Disparities (CFPHD), I continue to be an advocate for the underserved."

How did Goshen College prepare you for your current work? "When I won a scholarship to Goshen College in 1975, as the first Belizean student afforded this opportunity, I jumped at the chance. Goshen College nurtured a spirit of volunteerism and service to community that has become a part of my being. The diverse mixture of race, religion and peoples from all corners of the world confirmed my belief that access to care is a right for all."

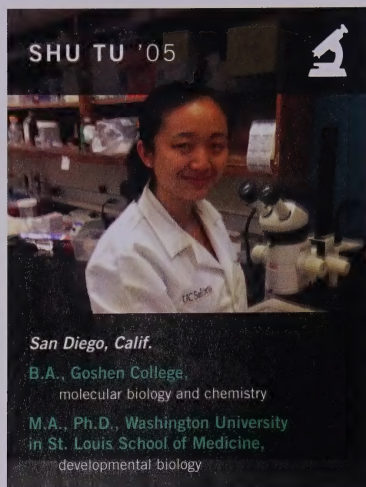

ANNA LIZAMA

B.A., Goshen College, nursing

M.D., University of Illinois,
Urbana-Champaign

A postdoctoral research scholar at UC San Diego, Shu Tu uses the zebrafish as a model organism to study how the vertebrate heart develops and regenerates, in order to develop therapeutics for the human heart.

When did you first know that you wanted to pursue the highest level of education?

"When I was in middle school or high school, I knew I wanted to get a Ph.D. in science."

How did Goshen College prepare you for your current work? "Goshen College provided me with a liberal arts education across different disciplines, which equipped me with communication skills to have discussions with fellow researchers in different fields. Also, I participated in the Maple Scholar undergraduate research program at GC. It gave me a taste of what it is like to be a scientific researcher, including conducting research in the laboratory, literature research, presenting one's own work and interacting with fellow researchers."

What is a piece of advice you would give to someone who is heading into your field?

"Follow your passion. Find a way to work on something that will keep you up at night and get you to go to work early just to see if it worked."

D.J. McFadden and Susan Lehman, a husband-and-wife duo, met at GC, got married and went on to earn their doctoral degrees together. D.J. is the health commissioner for Holmes County (Ohio), and Susan is a professor of physics at the College of Wooster.

When did you first know that you wanted to pursue the highest level of education?

D.J.: "When I was a junior or senior in high school I knew I wanted to go to medical school. However, it wasn't until I found myself asking questions about population health in medical school that I realized I wanted to pursue a degree in public health."

SUSAN: "I actually don't remember making the decision consciously. I was drawn to physics because I found the challenge of it to be rewarding. I had some research experiences at Goshen College that encouraged me to keep studying at the higher levels after completing my bachelor's degree."

How did Goshen College prepare you for your current work?

D.J.: "For me, the close relationships with our professors made the prospect of seeking higher education less intimidating. I also feel that the depth of understanding of the subjects that small class size provides helped me succeed."

SUSAN: "When we were at Goshen, we both participated in summer research as part of a consortium of colleges funded through the Pew Foundation. That opportunity helped me see what it would be like to be a physicist. Doing physics research is very different from doing physics homework, and the experience was fun. I want my students to see how much fun science is, and how different it is to do science as opposed to homework."

What is a piece of advice you would give to someone who is heading into your field?

D.J.: "Learn how to improve your communication skills and speaking skills so you can convey a message clearly. Learn how to read between the lines and understand body language. Look for the things that are not spoken."

SUSAN: "When you are focused on grades, it's too easy to lose the big picture and to miss the connections. Don't be afraid to say when you don't understand something."

THE MANY FACES OF GOSHEN COLLEGE

WHAT DOES A GOSHEN COLLEGE STUDENT LOOK LIKE TODAY?

On one hand, students today have never been more diverse. There are Mennonites and Muslims on campus. There are students from a block away and those from thousands of miles. There are 17 year olds and 55 year olds. There are students who identify as Libertarian, Democrat, Republican and Tea Party. There are art majors and students pursuing a master of science in nursing degree. There are straight and LGBTQ students. There are first generation college students and those whose great grandparents are GC alumni. They are all Goshen College students.

On the other hand, when you get past labels, boxes and demographic groupings, and meet individuals and hear their stories, you realize that Goshen College students continue to have more in common with each other than what may separate them. To better see those connections, we'd like to introduce you to several of our current students and let them tell you a bit of their own stories. They are just a few of the many faces of Goshen College.

WHY DID YOU CHOOSE GOSHEN COLLEGE? "I chose to come to Goshen College because of its distinct Mennonite values. Being Mennonite was always a significant aspect of my identity growing up in Ethiopia during my middle school years and then in Iowa during high school. It was a tradition I felt I could explore further at Goshen both spiritually and intellectually. Additionally, the prospect of playing soccer at the collegiate level was difficult to turn down."

WHAT HAS KEPT YOU AT GOSHEN COLLEGE? "Community is a big word at Goshen, and you feel it. Through class and athletics, I've developed relationships with so many different kinds of people. People are friendly, and it's delightfully inescapable. But what has really made the Goshen experience so enriching was the opportunity to study abroad. The lessons I learned in Peru, whether in a lecture on rural poverty or just spending time with my host family, left an impression on me that will stick with me the rest of my life."

Finally, it was because it is close to home (about 10 minutes away), so I could stay close to my friends and family."

WHAT HAS KEPT YOU AT GOSHEN COLLEGE? "One of the things I really love about Goshen College is the people. The experience we get at GC is amazing: an internship, SST and so many practice opportunities! The professors in the department are so educated in ASL that it makes them the perfect language models for us to learn from."

WHAT DO YOU HOPE TO DO WITH YOUR DEGREE? "With my degree I hope to become a nationally certified interpreter. MORE THAN MONEY

Maple City Health Care Center creates stories and community

BY DON YOST '72

During the winter of 2008-09, more than 20 percent of the workers in Goshen, Ind., were unemployed. In the city's north side neighborhood, the situation was worse.

Staff at the neighborhood's school, Chamberlain Elementary, learned that children in the school lacked food on weekends. The school started sending food home with children on Fridays.

Across the street from the school, employees of Maple City Health Care Center (MCHCC) saw that even with a 90 percent income-based discount, unemployed patients with diabetes or high blood pressure felt they couldn't afford care and were missing appointments. Untreated diabetes can result in the loss of a limb or death.

"Since the beginning of the center in 1989, our mission has been to foster healthy community in our neighborhood by providing and promoting affordable, accessible health care,” said James Nelson Gingerich ’80, the center’s founder and director.

As a young man, James joined a small group of Goshen College students and alums to live and work in the neighborhood. Realizing that many of his neighbors needed health care, James decided to go to medical school with the intention of returning to be a doctor.

Years later, when he had finished a degree at the Pritzker School of Medicine at the University of Chicago and a family practice residency in Indianapolis, James, his wife, Barb Nelson ’76, and their two sons moved into a house down the street from Chamberlain School. James became MCHCC’s first doctor-director-accountant-janitor.

Thanks to James’s leadership (his official title at MCHCC is Guardian of Vision), the center is guided by its mission and its stories. It was through storytelling that the people who cared about the center came to realize that in most of the iconic stories important to the center, when people focused on needs, needs multiplied. When they focused on assets, assets multiplied.

“The stories teach us that operating out of abundance rather than fear frees our imagination and creativity,” said James. “In 2009, when our staff and the members of our board of directors focused on the assets of our patients, we realized that unemployed people have the asset of time.”

With the city’s unemployment rate at about 20.2 percent (a year earlier it had been 5.2 percent), many of the helping organizations in Goshen in 2009 were overwhelmed and desperately needed volunteers. “We decided that if our patients used their asset of time to volunteer for these organizations, they would be helping us accomplish our mission of fostering a healthy community,” said James. “In return, we would offer patients $10 credit for every hour they volunteered. In this way, patients who had no cash could still contribute to their health care.”

The center called the program More than Money because people have more to offer than only money.

Arturo was one of the center’s diabetic patients who had missed appointments. Maria Hershberger ’96, part of MCHCC’s billing staff, told Arturo about More than Money. Arturo liked the idea of volunteering for LaCasa, a local housing rehabilitation organization. Maria gave Arturo vouchers that, when signed by a LaCasa representative, could be used like cash to pay off Arturo’s MCHCC bill.

“The stories teach us that operating out of abundance rather than fear frees our imagination and creativity.”

Arturo took the vouchers, but six months went by with no word. It looked like Arturo had disappeared.

Then, one morning, Susana Alonzo, a front desk receptionist, looked up to see a very different Arturo walking through the front door.

“Before that morning, he looked dejected and bent over, unwilling to look me in the eye,” said Susana. “That morning, he walked in like a king carrying a treasure. He handed me a whole stack of signed More than Money vouchers. With a big smile, he said, ‘Ahora puedo pagar.’ (Now I can pay.)”

“Improving patients’ sense of self-worth was a benefit none of us anticipated from the More than Money program,” said James. “As with many of the stories here at the center, the story about More than Money turned out to be a story about multiplying abundance, which is, after all, a joyful and Christ-like way to live.”

In fact, James steers the center by the light of Christian values. “At its heart,” James reflected, “Maple City Health Care Center is an attempt to emulate the early church with its spirit of inclusion and reconciliation and its ability to use and multiply the gifts of disparate people.”

While the employment rate on the north side of Goshen has improved since 2009, qualified patients of MCHCC continue to be able to pay for medical care at the center by volunteering in the community. Some volunteers help at Habitat for Humanity. Others distribute food and clothing at a local agency that serves low-income persons. Some work toward a GED degree, while others learn to speak English.

MCHCC’s innovations recently inspired the Robert Wood Johnson Foundation to choose the center as one of 31 exemplary primary care practices from across the nation. The foundation will use some of MCHCC’s innovations as a model for other practices that strive to offer affordable, high quality health care.

With more than 15 Goshen College alums on staff, MCHCC is ready for a new chapter in the journey toward a healthier community. The center plans to open a second site in a building known locally as the Abshire mansion. The mansion occupies nearly four acres in the middle of the north side neighborhood.

“We hope that the people we serve think of us as their medical home,” said James with a characteristic glint of humor. “But with this second site, they might think of us as their medical mansion.”

Whether it’s a mansion or a home, the new site will be a setting for even more stories about God’s abundance and the joy of our journey toward a healthier community.

Don Yost ’72 is the chief storyteller for Maple City Health Care Center. Check out the center’s website (www.mchcc.com), a collection of stories about the attitudes, processes and innovations that foster healthy community.

KELLI BURKHOLDER KING '77,
DIRECTOR OF ALUMNI RELATIONS

PEDICAB DAD

I'd like to tell you a little about our alumni board chair, Peter Eash-Scott '99. He's both a very unique individual and the embodiment of so many of our alumni and their intentional choices that make a difference in the broader world every day.

Peter is a stay-at-home dad, while his wife, Rachel '98, works as a physician at Health Ministries Clinic in Newton, Kan. If you were to meet Peter on the street, he would most likely be riding his pedicab (a bicycle rickshaw). Peter purchased his pedicab four years ago to haul his two young children around Lancaster, Pa., where they lived at the time. He took Daniel, age 10, and John, age 6, to school, piano lessons, soccer practices and trips to the store.

For Peter, this is a preferred mode of transportation. "A pedicab is the next best thing to walking," he said. "I like how it helps me engage the environment and the people around me (as well as the boys) compared to the isolation of being enclosed inside an automobile."

While it's great exercise, the extended and quiet time during pedicab commutes also gives Peter and his sons a unique opportunity to connect and learn from each other. On the morning of the 50th anniversary of the "March on Washington" last year, he and his sons listened to Martin Luther King Jr.'s "I Have a Dream" speech, inspiring one of the boys to even request that they listen to the speech again on the ride home.

In addition to being the primary child caregiver and household manager, Peter enjoys sharing his playwriting and acting talents broadly. He and Greg Wendling '99 have collaborated on several traveling comedy productions as the Squendling Brothers. And in February 2014, his one-act play "Stay Tuned" premiered on the GC campus after receiving the honorable mention in the college's 2012 Peace Play Competition.

Thoughtfully caring for the environment, relationships and broader justice issues in the world are attributes of many GC graduates. Like many alums, Peter also does this quietly, everyday, and with good humor and creativity. What's unique, though, is that he's a pedicab dad.

I am so thankful for all that Peter brings to his role as chair of the alumni board, and thankful to all of our alumni for making your own unique mark in your family, church, work, community and world through everyday choices!

SAVE THE DATE: HOMECOMING 2014

NEW SECTIONS ADDED TO ALUMNI NEWS AND NOTES

In this issue of the Bulletin, you'll note that we've added two new sections: one for alumni of our degree completion and adult education programs (organizational leadership, RN to BSN, business administration and social work), and one for alumni of our four master's degree programs (environmental education, nursing, intercultural leadership and business administration). Because of the ways these programs have expanded in recent years, we want these alumni to have their own space for their updates and no longer be interspersed with our traditional undergraduate programs.

ARE YOU RECEIVING GC'S BIMONTHLY E-NEWSLETTER IN YOUR INBOX?

PUTTING GOSHEN ON THE MUSIC MAP

Ignition Garage owner Steve Martin '76 believes in listening to music "the way it was intended to be heard."

So in 2012 he converted an old auto garage in downtown Goshen and stocked it with thousands of new and used CDs and vinyl LPs, a broadcasting booth for Goshen College's radio station, WGCS 91.1 The Globe, and a stage for artists to perform live music.

Two years later, Ignition Garage and The Globe continue to bring high quality music to Goshen.

"By providing a single location for retail, radio and live performances, touring artists will visit and connect with fans," said Martin on the Ignition website. "We get to see and hear some of the best emerging artists that are being played regularly on The Globe. Artists get a chance to perform, build a fan base for their music and sell merchandise directly."

Ignition Garage is successful because people crave the warmth of a record and the intimacy of a small concert venue, said Martin.

He acknowledged that digital music is more convenient than records, "but so is fast food," he said, equating vinyl to the slow food movement. "Sit back. Savor it. Take it as a time to unplug."

MAKING PEACE WITH SNOWSTORMS

Claudia and Rigo Garcia were driving on an Indiana highway through heavy snow and wind during a January 2014 blizzard when the cars in front of them suddenly stopped.

The Garcias called the police for help but were told officials had declared a state of emergency and no one would be coming for them. For 30 minutes, snow nearly engulfed their SUV.

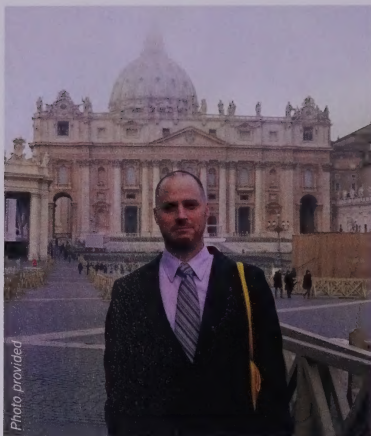

Then, through the swirling snow and wind they saw lights. It was Chris Birky '90 plowing his tractor through massive snow drifts to help.

"I realized they weren't going to be able to make it through so I called my wife and said, 'You probably ought to get the house ready because we're going to have people staying over,'" Birky told WSBT News.

The Garcias weren't the only stranded drivers – another married couple and a father and son were also stuck on the highway. For two nights, the Birky family offered hospitality to the six strangers.

"We just feel like it's what you do. God told us to love one another and that's what we believe," Birky said. "If we would have been afraid and not done anything, we would have really missed the opportunity to meet these great people we got to know."

AN UNEXPECTED AUDIENCE WITH POPE FRANCIS

Chad M. Bauman '95, associate professor of religion at Butler University, was attending a conference on Christianity and freedom in Rome this winter when he received a surprising invitation. The Vatican took interest in the conference and unexpectedly invited participants to a private audience with the Pope.

"In my wildest imagination I had thought, 'Wow, wouldn't it be cool if I'd be able to meet the pope,'" said Bauman, who was at the conference to speak about his research on Hindu-Christian conflict in India. "But there was nothing on the schedule to indicate anything like that might happen."

Grateful that he had packed a suit and tie to wear, Bauman joined the other conference participants in the papal residence, where Pope Francis exchanged glances, gestures and a few short words with the group. He smiled and joked throughout the gathering, laughing frequently and saying "Pray for me" several times.

"The entire audience lasted only a few minutes, but even in that short encounter, many of the reasons why he has generated so much enthusiasm and hope, among both Catholics and non-Catholic observers, were readily apparent," Bauman said.

Nancy Ludwig Graber '76 completed the CHPN (Certified Hospice & Palliative Care Nurse) exam in June 2013. She has been employed by the not-for-profit Harry Hynes Memorial Hospice in Wichita, Kan., a 15-bed in-patient unit as a staff nurse for more than four years. BEHIND THE SCENES Joelle Dussek '05 always knew she wanted to work in the television and film industry after college. Today the communication major is living her dream, having worked on the crew of Food Network's "Chopped," "CSI New York," HBO's "Boardwalk Empire" and the televised ball drop in Times Square on New Year's Eve 2014.

Dussek got her start in the world of television when she was accepted into Made in NY, a rigorous program that trains women, minorities and struggling New Yorkers for jobs in film and TV production. After graduating, Dussek became a production assistant and eventually worked her way up to field producing shows like "Chopped."

Last year Dussek landed one of her favorite jobs to date as a studio production coordinator for the late-night comedy talk-show "Totally Biased with Kamau Bell."

"It was great to be in a diverse staff with people of color," said Dussek. "I enjoy work where minority voices are a part of the conversation."

THE MUSE BEHIND THE MONSTER

Aliens, pirates and cyborgs are not folks most of us would expect to see on a typical workday, but Sarah Elizabeth Miller '05 would.

A professional makeup artist, Miller gained national attention while competing on the third season of Syfy Network's "Face Off," a popular reality show that features special-effects makeup artists competing to create characters like those seen in science fiction and horror films.

"It was like a super boot camp for making awesome creatures," said Miller, who competed against 11 other artists.

Though she did not win the competition, Miller loved the experience of being immersed in makeup design for nearly two months.

"As insane as the stress of coming up with something and fully realizing it within a 23 hour time frame...it was amazing to see what we were able to do when pushed so hard," Miller said.

A Goshen native, Miller got her start in theater makeup at Bethany Christian Schools. While at GC, Sarah was active with the theater program and later headed to Chicago to pursue professional costume, prop and set design for five years. It was there that she made the career-changing decision to attend Vancouver Film School's makeup design program. Since then, she has done makeup for a variety of TV shows and films, including programs on the Hallmark and Disney channels.

BANDPAGE FOUNDER AGAIN LANDS ON "30 UNDER 30" LIST

Eight years ago, J Sider was mopping floors at small concert venues. Today, the Goshen College alum is founder and CEO of BandPage, a popular online platform for musicians to build a presence and post content for fans.

With over a half million musicians as users – including big names like Beyoncé and Bruce Springsteen – BandPage has become the platform of choice for musicians to create new revenue streams and drive higher fan engagement. The San Francisco-based company has been so successful that Sider was recently named to both Inc. Magazine's and Billboard's "30 Under 30: Music" lists as well as three times to Forbes' "30 Under 30: Music."

"After years in the live music industry, I thought, 'There's got to be an easier way for musicians to promote themselves and make more money online'," said Sider on his website. "We've built BandPage to manage a musician's entire online presence with one update on one, central platform."

FAST JASON MAKES HIS MARK WITH THE ALLEYCATS

If Jason Yoder '08 were on a desert island and could only take one item with him, he'd bring a Frisbee.

Lucky for him, he gets ample time to play with flying discs as a member of the Indianapolis AlleyCats, a professional Ultimate team.

Known as "Fast Jason" among his fans, Yoder first discovered his passion for Ultimate at Goshen College during pickup games on the fields by the residence halls. At the end of his first year he joined an organized league in the area and never looked back.

"After getting a taste of competitive Ultimate, I could ignore it no longer," said Yoder. "Even when it was super windy and people didn't want to play, I would go out with a few discs and practice throwing into the wind for hours."

After graduating from Goshen and moving to Bloomington, Ind., to pursue a doctorate in computer and cognitive science, he continued to play Ultimate on club teams and began coaching the Indiana University men's team. When the American Ultimate Disc League and the AlleyCats were formed in 2012, Yoder was thrilled.

"The chance to play on a professional team for the sport that I love more than any other, and to have it so close to where I live – it seemed like a dream come true," Yoder said.

Becoming a campus resident at age 62

Photos: Tokens from Ina Slate's GC scrapbook, including her custom-decorated dorm room, and a pose with pals Carolyn Lehman Bender '34 and Caroline Smucker Brenneman '36.

Mennonite Historical Library

On Sept. 10, 1935, 62-year-old Ina Kronk Slate registered for her senior year at Goshen College. Already a familiar figure on campus, this doyenne of Goshen civic society had served GC as instructor for public school art from 1916-1923, and possibly had designed the first college seal. In the summer of 1933, Slate had decided to begin full-time studies as a GC student. She recorded details of her student life in a scrapbook, with details running from mundane to momentous: the decision to start parting her hair on the side, a disruptive visit by her dog Ginger to a morning chapel service, the sudden death of her husband George, president of Western Rubber, and her own subsequent election as first vice president of the Goshen company.

Now, for her senior year, Slate was taking up residence in a private room in Kulp Hall, sparing the need to commute from her stately brick home at 628 S. 5th St., almost a mile away. Her daughter Frances Latta helped her arrange some personal furnishing in the room. Gracious administrators granted her dispensation to have a hot plate in her room enabling her to prepare her own breakfasts (normally residents were permitted only one extra electric lamp).

From her dormitory room, she was better able to concentrate on both her studies and extracurricular activities. A French and German major, she busily broadened her own horizons and contributed to the experiences of her fellow students. She relished the kindness of secret dormitory "heart sisters," or the time Evelyn Burkholder Kreider '36 brought her a cushion to soften the cement bench where she studied in front of the Adelphian fountain. She burst into tears when Dean Harold S. Bender called on her to speak one day in sociology, but reveled in the compliments paid her work in various language and literature classes. She served as president of the Vesperian Literary Society and helped organize the senior class "sneak," an overnight excursion to an Ohio lake. Students and faculty alike benefitted from her generous gifts: flowers (especially roses), special treats, outings to restaurants near and far, even an expedition to the opera and Chicago Art Institute. During the year of campus residence, Slate survived the vicissitudes of dormitory heating (a memory that later prompted a generous $500 gift for a new heating plant).

In June 1936, when she received her bachelor's degree, Slate was the oldest student to have graduated from GC at the time.

THE MAGAZINE OF GOSHEN COLLEGE

FALL/WINTER 2014

IN THIS ISSUE

THOUGHTS FROM ABROAD

International alumni offer a unique perspective on global citizenship and reflect on the impact of their college experience.

ALL OVER THE MAP

From the Women's World Music Choir to amazing opportunities for studying abroad, students embrace global citizenship in many forms.

WHY I CAME BACK TO TEACH

Four Goshen College professors, who are also alumni, offer insights into teaching at their alma mater.

FROM THE PRESIDENT

CITIZENS OF EARTH AND SKY

At Goshen College, each year we focus on one core value. This year we will ponder the meaning of “global citizenship,” which is expressed primarily in two ways. The first and most common understanding has to do with our desire to foster “intercultural openness” between people of differing worldviews, experiences and ethnicities.

The second understanding, though, presupposes every form of global citizenship there is. At root, to be a global citizen is to be a citizen of the earth and sky. To be a global citizen is to desire to experience, understand and steward the many and varied multi-cultures – the biodiversity – of the natural world around us.

As citizens of earth and sky, we must learn how better to eavesdrop on creation, to listen to and learn from “the rocks and trees, the skies and seas” and everything in between. What might we hear God say to us as we hold a conch shell to our ear in the middle of Indiana, or in the desert for that matter, and hear the echo of a billion gallons of ocean whispering to us? What might a thousand species of microbes living on and inside us say to us about interdependency, diversity and survival?

It should not strike us as all that odd, then, that Jesus once taught his disciples to trust in God by listening to what the sparrows or the lilies of the field might teach us. Nor should we think it odd that the Psalmist notices the trees of the field clap their hands, that the hills and mountains shout for joy, that the sun, moon and stars declare the glory of God.

A biodiverse and multicultural natural world is the key to the earth’s survival and that of our own. The more species of animal or plant we kill off or lose, the more we lose out on the solution to a complex human problem just waiting to be solved. Perhaps, it’s time to learn from God’s cleverly designed universe.

Finally, earth and sky citizens are called to paint the world green. We strive imperfectly to do that at Goshen College by voluntarily purchasing all of our electricity from renewable energy sources, turning acres of campus into native landscaping, educating all ages at our environmental learning center, recycling and composting. These, and many more examples, are expressions of our deep green commitment.

Creation first proclaimed loudly and clearly that darkness will not last. Creation is blessing you and me with a promise that no matter the difficulty, the hardship, the darkness or the pain, the sun will rise again. In that heavenly sign, I am confident.

ABOUT THE COVER

As it says on the Goshen College website, "if you're a Goshen College student, you'll find that 'global awareness' isn't a course you take, or a club you join. It's how you live." The core value of "global citizenship" – the theme for this year on campus – is woven into nearly every corner of a student's experience, especially as we embrace an understanding of this value to include care for all of Mother Earth (see President Brenneman's column at left) and the intercultural opportunities that don't require hopping on a jet plane to experience. Graphic designer Hannah Gerig Meyer '08 created this mixed media illustration to bring this all together.

Inquiry Programs send students to lead, serve, minister

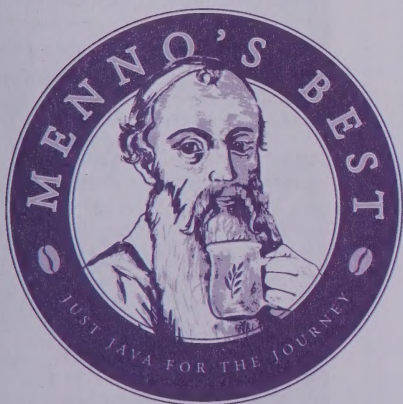

This summer, 15 Goshen College students had the opportunity to spend three months serving at a camp, congregation or service agency through the Camping, Ministry and Service Inquiry Programs. The students were placed in locations across the United States and abroad – from Elkhart to Palestine, students worked within supportive communities to develop skills for leadership and explore both faith and vocation.

From Peru to Goshen, 'Menno's Best' coffee offers fundraising opportunity for youth groups

In time for the holidays, Goshen College has developed a new and unique fundraising opportunity for all Mennonite Church USA youth groups to raise money to attend the convention next summer in Kansas City: Menno's Best coffee! Direct trade and organic, this is "just java for the journey."

Menno's Best organic coffee beans are grown by small-scale farmers in Peru's mountainous Chanchamayo province, where Goshen College students have worked during Study-Service Term. The beans are harvested by local growers and shipped directly to Goshen, Indiana. After local roasting, they are then packaged in the college's student-run coffee shop, Java Junction, and ready to be either purchased online or sold directly by youth groups.

GC students' quick response helps save a life in Munich airport

Somewhere in the world, there is a man who owes his life in part to Goshen College students.

On May 1, not long into the second leg of their flight to Thessaloniki, Greece, for a May Term class to study the Apostle Paul and the ancient church, a flight carrying 30 GC students and faculty made an emergency landing due to a technical issue. The students and other passengers disembarked in Munich, Germany.

As the group settled in and looked for food and free Wi-Fi, a student noticed that a man nearby had collapsed. Panicked, Seth Conley, associate professor of communication, asked a group of GC students if they knew CPR. Molly Malone '14 (top right) from South Bend, Indiana, and Julianna Tennefoss (top left), a senior from Greenwood, Delaware, both education majors who had recently completed CPR training, jumped up to help.

Malone began compressions and Tennefoss called for an AED machine. As luck would have it, a third student, Brett Conrad, a senior from Lakewood, Colorado, had noticed one in the airport earlier and sprinted to grab it. After several minutes of CPR and using the AED machine, paramedics arrived and continued to work feverishly to get the man's heart restarted. Eventually, they carted him down the terminal and to a hospital. The students were told that the man was alive and talking to paramedics when he was taken away, but never learned his identity.

GC student named youngest National Mandolin Champion

Ethan Setiawan (left) first picked up a mandolin in 2010, when he was 13 years old. Last month, at the age of 17, he was the youngest person ever to be named national mandolin champion at the Walnut Valley Bluegrass Festival in Winfield, Kansas.

Setiawan, who lives in Middlebury and studies at Goshen College through the early enrollment program, beat out 23 other mandolinists for the top spot.

Additionally, Nathan Graber-McCrae '09 from Denver, Colorado, placed third in the National Hammer Dulcimer Championship at the festival.

Goshen College welcomes Great March for Climate Action

Goshen College students, staff and community members welcomed to campus walkers participating in the Great March for Climate Action on Monday, Sept. 15. The 30 to 40 march participants received hospitality in the form of singing, a crowded potluck and a dry place to sleep. The group reported that it was the largest welcome they had received.

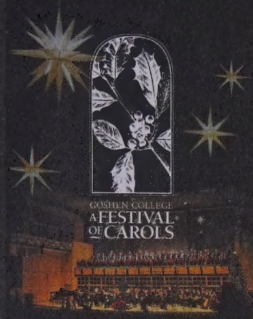

The marchers left Los Angeles in March and plan to walk 3,000 miles across America to Washington, DC, inspiring action to resolve the climate crisis. This is one of the largest coast-to-coast marches in American history.

Student documentary receives national Telly Award

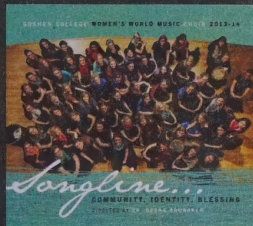

FiveCore Media and the Goshen College Communication Department received a national bronze Telly Award for "Breaking Down Barriers: Journeys of the Apostle Paul," a documentary filmed and produced by Goshen College students and faculty.

The 30-minute documentary was made into a DVD that has received worldwide distribution and a television program that has aired in the central Indiana region. It tells the story of how the Apostle Paul overcame religious, cultural and physical obstacles as a leader of the first generation of Christians, and guides viewers on the path Paul took through Greece and Rome.

Student-created cookbook aids children in Peru

This summer, two students created a Peruvian cookbook, "Los Sabores del Peru," to sell to raise money for kids in Peru.

Gretchen Geyer (right), a senior social work major from Parnell, Iowa, and Jake Smucker (left), a senior communication major from Newton, Kansas, both went to Peru for Study-Service Term (SST) in the spring of 2014. Geyer worked at a comedor (food kitchen for children), and collected recipes from her service there, as well as from her host family.

To order a copy of "Los Sabores del Peru," email Geyer at gegeyer@goshen.edu. Proceeds from the $10 cookbook will go to the comedor where Geyer worked to provide daily meals for impoverished children.

MAPLE LEAFS

A NEW LEAF HAS TURNED

The Goshen College Athletics Department released a new athletic logo in May.

"We sincerely believe these logos honor the long and storied tradition of those who laid the foundation for the program more than 50 years ago, as well as representing the positive and bold future ahead," said Josh Gleason, interim athletic director.

Designed by Mongoose Graphics, the logo's centerpiece is a powerful "G" graphic interlocked into a stylish new Maple Leaf. The versatility of the set, though, includes stand-alone word marks, a leaf, and the "G" graphic, allowing for use across a variety of mediums while remaining consistent to its core.

Mandy Yoder (at left), associate pastor at Belmont Mennonite Church in Elkhart, Indiana, has dedicated her life to spreading the love of Christ to everyone she meets – “no exceptions, no qualifications.”

Yoder, who played tennis for Goshen College, first discovered her passion for ministry as a college student. After graduating, Yoder began studies at Associated Mennonite Biblical Seminary (now Anabaptist Mennonite Biblical Seminary). Two years later she and her husband moved to Indianapolis, where she finished her seminary degree by attending Christian Theological Seminary and commuting to AMBS. For the next year she worked at the Homeless Initiative Program doing street outreach and case management, then joined the pastoral team at First Mennonite in Indianapolis.

Five years later, she moved back to Elkhart County to pastor at Belmont Mennonite Church in Elkhart, where she continues to serve today. Her work involves pastoral care, preaching and oversight of faith formation for all ages. She's also involved in providing leadership for small groups, spiritual direction leaders and community life events.

Yoder and her husband, Jon Schrock '99, have two young children, Noah and Anna.

CHAMPIONS OF CHARACTER ALUMNI AWARDEES

For the ninth year, the Goshen College Maple Leafs Athletic Club presented the Dr. Ruth Gunden and the Dr. Roman Gingerich Champion of Character Awards. The two awards, created in 2005, are presented to a male and female alumni athlete who exemplify the college's core values in their lives, work and community service. Gunden and Gingerich were pioneers in Goshen College's athletic history.

DR. ROMAN GINGERICH CHAMPION OF CHARACTER AWARD: KENNETH E. EDWARDS '81

Kenneth E. Edwards (above, left), an audit partner at the accounting firm CohnReznick LLP in Roseland, New Jersey, has dedicated his time to providing economic and educational opportunities for minority groups.

Edwards is a founder of the Hope Chest Scholarship Foundation (HCSF), an organization that has provided nearly $1 million of post-secondary education financial assistance for minority students from New Jersey.

During Edwards' time at Goshen College, he was a star athlete on the basketball and baseball teams, actively participated in the Black Student Union and hosted his own late night show on the college radio station, 91.1 WGCS.

In 1981, he graduated with a degree in accounting. Since then, he has spent more than 25 years in the financial industry, working primarily in public accounting. Today, Edwards works with clients in manufacturing, distribution and wholesale industries. He informs them about Security and Exchange Commission (SEC) regulations and complex accounting concepts.

Edwards is active in his church, Calvary Baptist Church in Morristown, New Jersey, where he serves as the head deacon. He and his wife, Gwen (Reid) Edwards '83 – a member of the GC Alumni Board – have three children, Ken Jr., Camile and Corry.

He also teaches Spanish at Goshen High School.

Arron Patrick became the fourth men's soccer coach in 48 years in June after Thavisak Mounsithiraj concluded a 15-season tenure. 2014 ALUMNI AWARDEES

Three outstanding alumni were honored for their longtime commitment to service with Culture for Service Awards and the Young Alumni Servant Leadership Award at Homecoming Weekend 2014.

Established in 1989, the Culture for Service Awards honor Goshen College graduates who demonstrate a lifelong commitment to service. Recipients distinguish themselves through commendable accounts of service and achievements at home or in their churches, colleges, communities and the larger world. The Young Alumni Servant Leadership Award, created in 2004, recognizes a Goshen College alumnus or alumna with notable contributions and achievements in career, public or church service and volunteer activities early in post-graduate life. Read more about the athletic alumni awards on page 13.

You can see the criteria and fill out a nomination form at goshen.edu/alumni.

The deadline is Jan. 16, 2015.

Esther Kawira '74

Culture for Service awardee

For more than 30 years, Dr. Esther Lehman Kawira, a 1974 graduate from Shirati, Tanzania, has worked as a physician tending to the needs of patients in that country. Though she grew up in the United States, Kawira has raised a family, practiced medicine, researched childhood cancer and started a non-governmental organization in the Tanzanian village that she calls home.

When Kawira was a student at Goshen College in the early 1970s, she took a year off to serve in the Netherlands with Mennonite Central Committee. While there, she discovered that she loved immersing herself in other cultures.

While studying pre-med at Goshen, she met Josiah Kawira, a student from Tanzania who was studying economics. They married after she finished medical school and residency in 1980. Three years later, along with their one-year old daughter, Sara, the family moved to Shirati, Tanzania.

"I feel that my life is a bridge between cultures," said Kawira. "I can be an advocate for either side."

In 2012, after 20 years at Shirati Hospital, and seven years as its director, The Kawiras established the Shirati Health, Education and Development (SHED) Foundation, dedicated to humanitarian, development and health work.

They established the Sota Clinic, a village-based health care clinic that specializes in Burkitt's Lymphoma research, the most common childhood tumor in Africa, along with other medical services.

In addition to her work in the health care field, Kawira has also worked as a teacher, writer and development worker.

The Kawiras are supported by College Mennonite Church in Goshen. Their four children, Sara '04, Timothy, Jona '12, and Joel '14, all currently live and work in the United States.

Ray Funk '69

Culture for Service awardee

Ray Funk's lifelong work has been driven by a vision of community and social justice. A 1969 graduate from Saskatchewan, Canada, Funk used his leadership role as a member of the Canadian Parliament from 1988 to 1993 to benefit minority groups and economically depressed communities.

Funk has focused on resolving long-standing conflicts between Canada's aboriginal "First Nations" peoples and the prejudice and governmental structures that have historically dominated them. He has worked directly with minority community leaders to resolve these conflicts.

After graduating from Goshen with a degree in sociology, Funk moved to Ontario and began working in adult education and community development. Later, he returned to the United States to earn a master's degree in adult education from Michigan State University in 1981.

In 1985, Funk started Spruce River Research, a nonprofit organization in Saskatchewan committed to community economic development, facilitating partnerships between industries, aboriginal organizations, communities and the government.

In 1988, he was elected as a member of the Parliament of Canada for the Prince Albert/Churchill River district in Saskatchewan.

He served in Parliament from 1988 to 1993, a time he called "one of the most exciting terms of office in modern Canadian history." During Funk's term, Nelson Mandela came to address Parliament, constitutional developments were underway and a violent land dispute occurred between a First Nations group and the town of Oka, Quebec.

As a politician, Funk was heavily involved with peace and social justice issues. He authored and introduced a peace trust fund bill in the House of Commons, though it did not pass. He was also heavily involved in the creation of the Nunavut Territory, Canada's newest and largest territory.

Today, Funk continues to work with First Nations peoples through Spruce River Farms. He and his wife, Shirley Falstead, recently helped to start an organic farmer's market near their home in Saskatchewan.

Malinda Berry '96

Young Alumni Servant Leadership awardee

Malinda Berry, a 1996 graduate and an assistant professor of theology and ethics at Anabaptist Mennonite Biblical Seminary (AMBS), is a life-long learner. She has written about and presented on an array of topics: spirituality, feminism, race, peace, theology, cooking and the literary arts.

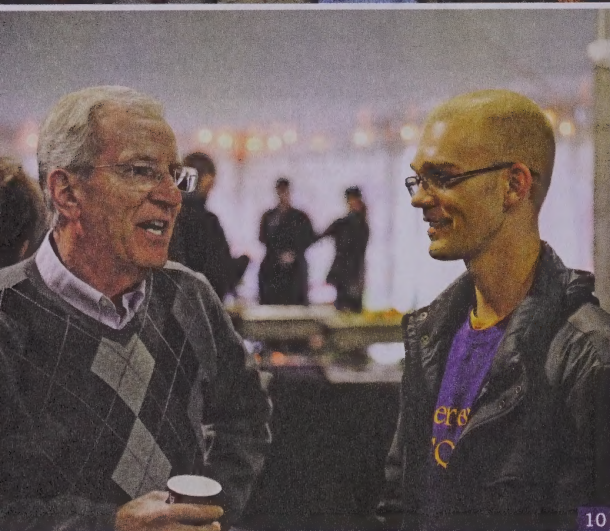

Berry graduated from Goshen College in 1996 with a degree in history and English. She received a master's degree in peace studies from AMBS and a master's degree and doctor of philosophy degree from Union Theological Seminary in New York.

She served as an assistant professor of theological studies and director of the master's program at Bethany Theological Seminary, a visiting scholar in religion and women's studies at Goshen College, an associate director of Mennonite Voluntary Service and the chair of the Mennonite Education Agency board of directors.

Berry and her husband, John Stoltzfus, have a one-year-old son, Jeremiah. They attend Fellowship of Hope Mennonite Church in Elkhart.

"Although the idea of service was always part of my upbringing, my time in Goshen helped me mature my conviction that service to my country was what I really wanted to do. Most of all, my time on campus and my relationship with several members of the faculty and student body...brought me peace of heart and taught me how Christianity is shared with others in small, daily statements of peace and caring."

Students embrace global citizenship

EDITED BY
BRIAN YODER SCHLABACH '07

One day, as Andrea Medina, a junior social work major and commuter student from Goshen, chatted with her friends in the student commuter lounge, an older woman introduced herself as a visitor and joined the conversation. Wanting to learn more about the college, she asked Medina and her friends why they hadn't participated in Study-Service Term (SST). They answered collectively: "the money."

The woman's next words, for Medina, were life changing.

"She said that money would always be an issue throughout all our lives, but that we should invest in traveling while we're young and we have the opportunity," said Medina.

In that moment, Medina decided to sign up for a May term course in Spain and Morocco. Soon after, she moved on to campus to nurture relationships and seek more fulfilling experiences.

While in Spain, Medina felt at home with the Spanish language and Catholic culture. Morocco, however, was rich with unfamiliarity. Instead of allowing the fear of a new experience frighten her, she embraced it with awe and willingness to learn.

"She was the type of student that I like to have in this course since everything was so meaningful to her and she was such an eager learner," said Dean Rhodes '72, professor of Spanish.

The class in Spain and Morocco proved to be an integral part of Medina's college experience. Before visiting Spain, Medina had never been outside the United States. But with the support of her family and friends, her world opened up. She plans to visit Pakistan in December and Puerto Rico next summer, and hopes to continue to make traveling the world a major part of her life.

"I don't want to spend a moment of my life being unhappy," said Medina. "The Spain and Morocco trip gave me a boost to continue doing that."

FORMING GLOBAL CITIZENS

Goshen College is known for its focus on international and intercultural experiences. This year, U.S. News and World Report ranked Goshen fifth in the nation for having the most students who study abroad among liberal arts colleges nationwide. Besides SST, students also have a chance to study abroad during Goshen's three-week May Term.

While GC has been offering May term courses abroad for 40 years, in the last few years the number and variety of overseas May term courses has grown. In the last two years, students have had the opportunity to study business in China, communications or ecology in Kenya, Bible and religion in Greece and Italy, history in Spain and Morocco, Anabaptism in Paraguay, arts in London and nursing in Nepal.

In fact, last spring 11 nursing students, with the help of Beth Beels '75, experienced the realities of nursing abroad and found new "sisters" during a May term nursing class in Nepal. Beels has served as a teacher, nurse and service worker in Nepal multiple times since graduating from Goshen, and the class fulfilled Beels' life-long dream of bringing GC nursing students to learn and live among Nepali students. It also became the first Goshen College international nursing course in the nursing department's 60-plus year history.

"I was sometimes moved to tears by the level of the students' sensitivity, passion, professionalism, compassion and desire to make a difference," said Gail Weybright '95, associate professor of nursing.

The students served in the Tansen Mission Hospital, which is considered to be one of the best nursing schools in Nepal, and is located in the central hills of the country.

"These May Term classes give students who are not able to go on SST the opportunity to go abroad and have a cross-cultural experience," said Tom Meyers '75, director of international education. "Even for students who have already gone on SST, this is a chance to experience yet another culture. It's a wonderful window into a larger world."

SERVING AROUND THE WORLD

For Sam Carlson, a junior peace, justice and conflict studies (PJCS) major from Goshen, experiencing the world came in the form of the summer Service Inquiry Program. While students typically complete the program in the United States, there are opportunities to serve through the program abroad.

Carlson spent last summer at the Palestinian Conflict Resolution Center (Wi'am) in Bethlehem, Palestine, which works to resolve disputes within the Palestinian community through traditional Arab mediation as well as Western models of conflict resolution. He is among about a dozen Goshen College students who have come to Palestine in the last few summers at the encouragement of Marcelle Zoughbi '13 from Bethlehem, whose father is founder and director at Wi'am.

Joined by Jessica Davila, a junior from Goshen, Kiernan Wright, a junior from Orrville, Ohio, and Clare Maxwell '13, Carlson worked as a children's camp counselor at Wi'am. He regularly stepped over tear gas canisters, stun grenades and smoke bombs on his way to work in the morning, and often the days were cut short by nearby fighting.

Even so, Carlson has come to love Palestine and its culture beyond the conflict it is known for. The morning after he arrived in Bethlehem, his neighbors hosted a feast for him.

"My neighbors – complete strangers – opened up their home to me," Carlson said. "They gave me plate after plate of food: lemony olives, warm pita, crisp cucumbers. Every day I (was) humbled."

A GLOBAL CAMPUS

Between SST, international May term classes and other opportunities, about 80 percent of students at Goshen college study abroad. And with a growing diversity of students (10 percent of GC students are international, and about a third of students identify as a person of color), everyone who sets foot on campus leaves with an intercultural experience.

That international spirit is displayed annually through events like the International Student Club dinner and coffeehouse and the Earthtones: Songs from Many Cultures concert, both of which explore music and performance from around the world.

The Women's World Music Choir, which celebrated its 10th year this year under the direction of Debra Brubaker '79, professor of music, has performed songs in 30 languages from all over the world – from Appalachia to Bulgaria to South Africa. Many of the songs in the choir's repertoire focus on the daily lives of global women, touching on themes like hard work, marriage, female friendships, nature, community and spirituality.

When she was in high school, the first things Kate Friesen '14 noticed about the Goshen College Women's World Music Choir were their colorful scarves and bare feet.

"But their sound was different, too," said Friesen, who joined the choir in her first year after arriving at Goshen. "They were singing in different languages and using the full range of their voices. They didn't sound like other women's choirs."

The choir's focus on telling diverse stories has shaped Friesen's view of what it means to be part of a global community.

"Hearing the songs of other countries connects us to the people from the places where they originate and allows us to get intimate with a tiny piece of a different culture," Friesen said. "This choir is about making music, but it's also about curiosity: wanting to explore the world and find the intersection between other people's stories and our own."

Why I came back to teach

EDITED BY ARIEL ROPP '13

PHOTOS BY BRIAN YODER SCHLABACH '07

Goshen College alumni often have the opportunity to use their teaching talents at a variety of higher education institutions. Here are the stories of four of the 38 current teaching faculty who chose to return to their alma mater to serve and offer their knowledge, wisdom and gifts to a new generation of college students.

"The students at Goshen inspire me as some of the most energized, astute and thoughtful college students I've ever encountered."

What drew you to want to teach at Goshen College?

The students at Goshen inspire me as some of the most energized, astute and thoughtful college students I've ever encountered. I wanted to participate in a learning environment of that caliber.

What do you love most about teaching GC students?

They love to sing, they love to create new things, they love discovery.

What excites you about music?

The unlimited power and potential that music finds in us continues to inspire and motivate me. Our hurting world needs the beauty and understanding that music can create, both within the individual and in a gathered community.

How does the college's vision connect or shape your teaching and work?

My focus is on multicultural music and the community that it creates across the globe and across centuries. The best music has a story connected to it. That story may highlight the diversity of the expressed musical experience, but it also shows how we are united as human beings.

How do you strive to make peace through your work and life?

By not being afraid to wade into situations that may be filled with conflict, and trying to find the thread that connects us as humans. Music is the best starting point I know for that to happen.

What do you enjoy doing outside of your academic work?

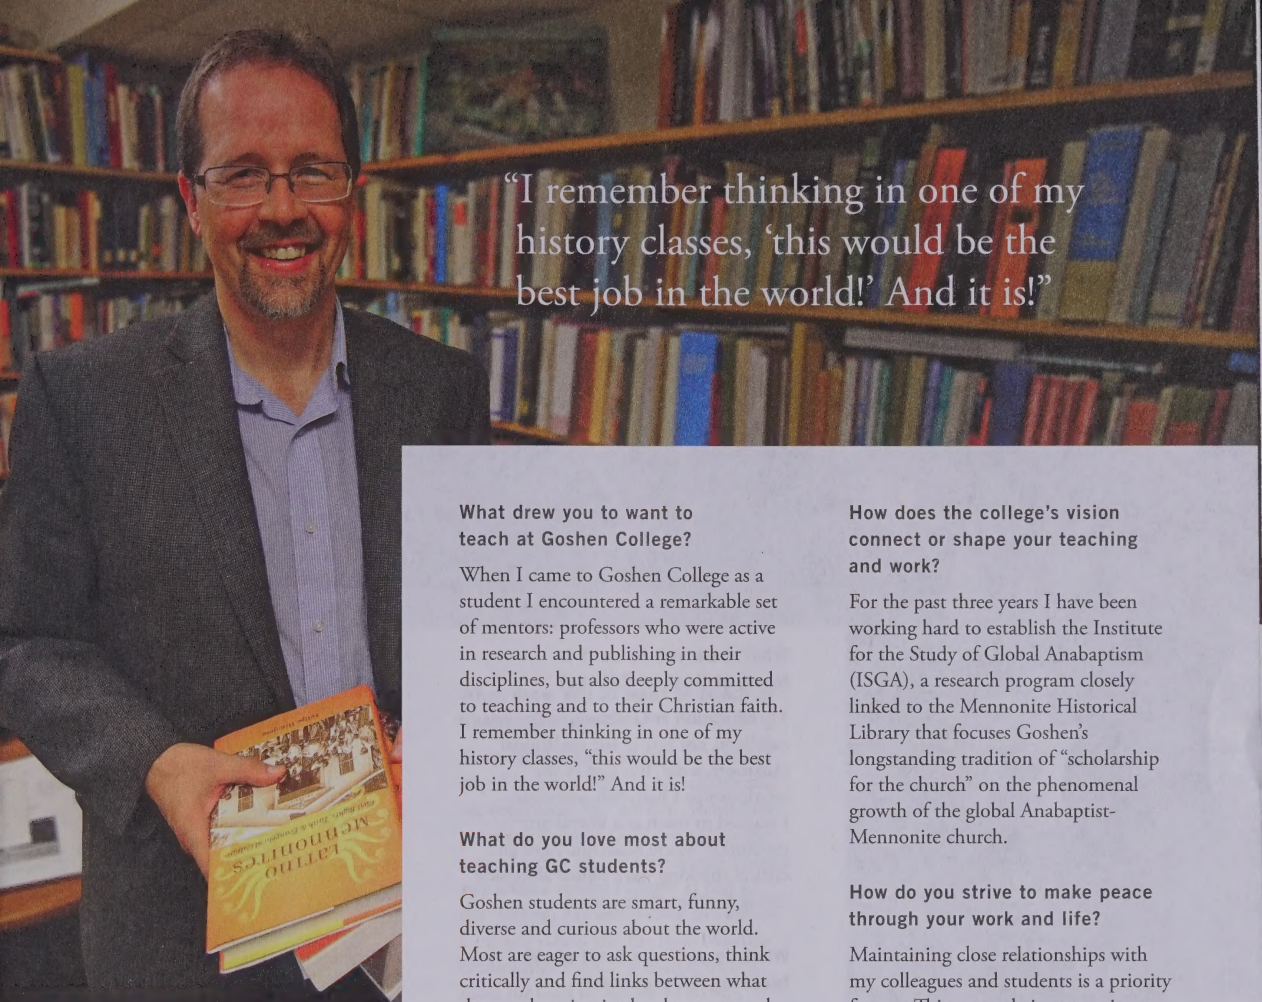

Gardening, quilting, reading, traveling, running, camping, swimming, biking, sharing meals and activities with my children, and hanging out with my cats.

Is there anything else you would like readers to know about you?

Looking for and finding new multicultural music for my choirs to sing is like opening a present on Christmas day – a delightful discovery with great promise.

Debra
Brubaker '79

professor of music

John D.
Roth '81
professor of history

"I remember thinking in one of my history classes, 'this would be the best job in the world!' And it is!"

What drew you to want to teach at Goshen College?

When I came to Goshen College as a student I encountered a remarkable set of mentors: professors who were active in research and publishing in their disciplines, but also deeply committed to teaching and to their Christian faith. I remember thinking in one of my history classes, "this would be the best job in the world!" And it is!

What do you love most about teaching GC students?

Goshen students are smart, funny, diverse and curious about the world. Most are eager to ask questions, think critically and find links between what they are learning in the classroom and the world beyond Goshen College. I learn from them every day.

What excites you about history?

History is such a wide-open field. Even though we are often focused on a very specific era or region, historians can ask very basic questions about the meaning and purpose in life, the nature of human communities, competing visions of the "good life," or understandings of transcendence. It brings together the particular and the universal in beautifully complex ways.

How does the college's vision connect or shape your teaching and work?

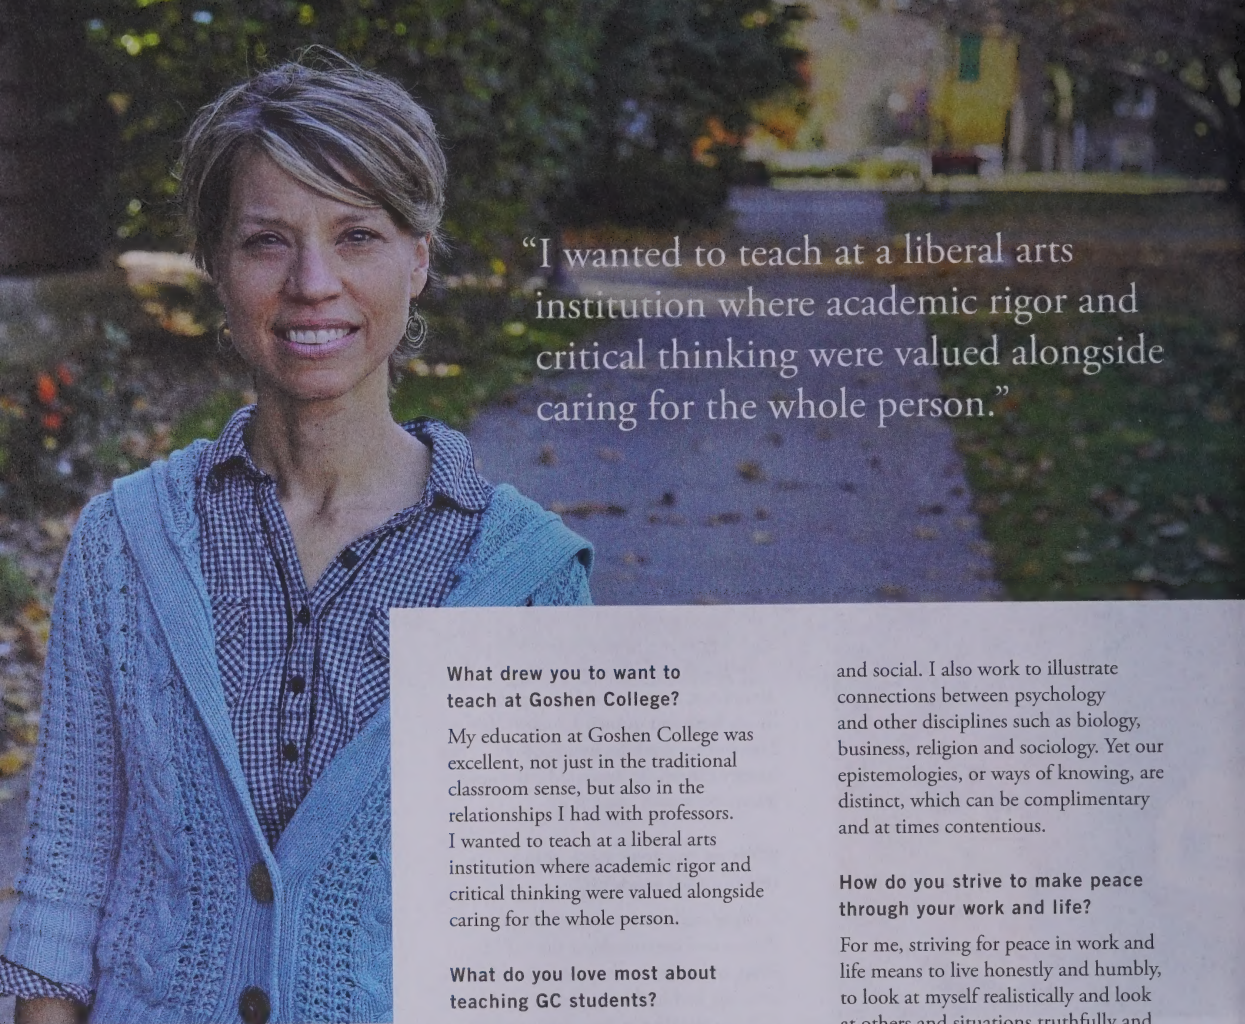

For the past three years I have been working hard to establish the Institute for the Study of Global Anabaptism (ISGA), a research program closely linked to the Mennonite Historical Library that focuses Goshen's longstanding tradition of "scholarship for the church" on the phenomenal growth of the global Anabaptist-Mennonite church.

How do you strive to make peace through your work and life?

Maintaining close relationships with my colleagues and students is a priority for me. This means being attentive to each other as whole people, including the emotional and spiritual aspects of our identity. I want to treat people with dignity and respect, always seeking out perspectives that differ from my own. Gaining a historical perspective on conflicts – understanding the deeper reasons why people or groups behave the way they do – is often the first step toward reconciliation.

What do you enjoy doing outside of your academic work?

I love to read all kinds of books – mysteries, biographies, texts on brain science and ethics – and I run every day. I also enjoy spending time with my wife and our family, which now includes a granddaughter.

“I wanted to teach at a liberal arts institution where academic rigor and critical thinking were valued alongside caring for the whole person.”

Julie
Reese '92

professor of psychology

What drew you to want to teach at Goshen College?

My education at Goshen College was excellent, not just in the traditional classroom sense, but also in the relationships I had with professors. I wanted to teach at a liberal arts institution where academic rigor and critical thinking were valued alongside caring for the whole person.

What do you love most about teaching GC students?

I love relating to young people, hearing their ideas, joys and frustrations. They challenge me to think carefully about what I believe and to be aware of how limited is my knowledge of God's creation.

What excites you about psychology?

No matter who you are or what you do, you have to interact with people. Having a good, albeit limited, understanding of human behavior can make life rich.

How does the college's vision connect or shape your teaching and work?

As a psychologist, I seek to understand culture in all of its parts: personal and social. I also work to illustrate connections between psychology and other disciplines such as biology, business, religion and sociology. Yet our epistemologies, or ways of knowing, are distinct, which can be complimentary and at times contentious.

How do you strive to make peace through your work and life?

For me, striving for peace in work and life means to live honestly and humbly, to look at myself realistically and look at others and situations truthfully and compassionately. Although I am not surprised by the world's brokenness, I strive to make the world a better place and never give up the notion that what I do matters. Ultimately, I am convinced that my ultimate peace and hope is in the Lord whose love, grace, mercy and goodness is far beyond my comprehension.

Is there anything else you would like readers to know about you?

I am a wife to a loving husband and the mother of two wonderful daughters. I am a breast cancer survivor whose bout with a deadly disease has been a wake-up call to try very hard to live each day according to what really matters most to me.

“GC students are passionate about not only becoming leaders in their fields, but conscientious world citizens as well.”

Andrew
Hartzler '98
associate professor of accounting

What drew you to want to teach at Goshen College?

Since 1998, I have worked in the field of public accounting as an auditor and tax consultant and advisor. About four years ago I sensed God was calling me toward a new area of service and I began to pursue a master's degree as part of that calling. My connection to Goshen College's values and the local business community made it a unique fit as a place for God to call me to serve.

What do you love most about teaching GC students?

One of the unique dynamics of Goshen College is the way students and faculty can develop close relationships that have a strong mentoring aspect to them. GC students are passionate about not only becoming leaders in their fields, but conscientious world citizens as well.

What excites you about accounting?

Business permeates most facets of our lives and accounting is an integral component to business. Learning business at Goshen College gives students the opportunity to integrate their faith and worldview with their business knowledge and skills.

How does the college's vision connect or shape your teaching and work?

From my first international experiences during Study-Service Term in Central America, to living in the U.S./Mexico border region, my intercultural and international experiences have shaped who I am and how I relate to others. My faith also plays an integral role in how I communicate core values and concepts to others. Helping students to see how all these areas are interconnected is central to my goals as a professor.

How do you strive to make peace between your work and life?

Being at peace and living at peace with others encapsulates my view of how God calls us to live our lives on earth. The primary obstacle to living in peace with others and with God is pride. To overcome pride requires a daily commitment to humility, which recognizes that all of who we are is connected to who we are in Christ.

DAN KOOP LIECHTY '88,
DIRECTOR OF ALUMNI AND CAREER NETWORKS

BECOMING GLOBALLY- MINDED

After nearly 20 years of studying, working and serving in Michigan and India, my wife Jill ('90) and I returned to Goshen College in 2011 with our family. Our time as students at GC impacted our desire to live abroad and share this kind of experience with our three children, and we are more convinced than ever that the world does indeed need Goshen College, as President Brenneman said when he was called to leadership in November 2005. And I am just one of thousands of global citizen alumni whose lives have been dramatically shaped by their intercultural experiences on campus and abroad.

This fall I am starting in a new role overseeing both alumni relations and career services, after working in enrollment at the college for the past three years. This new model of combining these two areas is exciting because we believe it will help us even better connect our global community of graduates with our current group of globally-minded students. Some examples: those returning from Study-Service Term (SST) are now more clearly asked to consider their experience abroad and how it impacts their vocation. All are encouraged to make sure it is highlighted on their resume, as we continue to hear stories of how SST has made the positive difference in the selection of our graduates when they are considered for employment opportunities or graduate school admission.

Our graduates are ready for the world as global citizens and I hear them acknowledge that the grounding and connections they made as students here are what helps make their work powerful and their lives meaningful. It certainly has for me.

A LIFETIME OF PEACEMAKING

When Rachel Kreider '31 was born, William Howard Taft was president, the Ford Model T was brand new, and the Titanic was under construction.

Born in 1909, Kreider isn't quite sure how she managed to live so long. Today, the 105-year-old lives at Greencroft in Goshen.

Kreider grew up in the Goshen area and attended Goshen College during the onset of the Great Depression. During college she met and fell in love with Leonard Kreider, whom she married in the summer of 1933. They began life together in a small attic room near Ohio State University (OSU), where Leonard studied for a doctorate in chemistry and Rachel worked on her master's degree in philosophy.

As a graduate student at OSU in the mid-1930s, she participated in a move against compulsory military training, then the norm at OSU and many other schools. She continued working for peace over the next seven decades.

Kreider was usually a mover and shaker in secondary roles, as her role as homemaker and mother of three children allowed. In Goshen, she continued a lively interest in world affairs, writing to her representatives in Congress and attending meetings of the local Seniors for Peace. When President George Bush threatened war against Iraq 2002, Kreider, then 93 years old, offered her peace testimony as passionately as she had at OSU in 1934-35.

PROFESSOR EMERITUS OF ENGLISH JOHN FISHER '48 PASSES AWAY

John J. Fisher, professor emeritus of English, who taught at Goshen College for 39 years, died at his home at Waterford Crossing on July 28, 2014. He was 88 years old.

Fisher was born in Bloomsburg, Pennsylvania, and graduated from Goshen College in 1948 with a degree in English. He earned a master's degree in English from the University of Pennsylvania before returning to Goshen College to teach. Fisher taught in the GC English department from 1953-1992.

"He was the one in our department whose patience and encouragement with struggling students was most continuous and noteworthy," said Wilbur Birky, professor emeritus of English and international education at GC. "His quiet sense of humor was always present, which along with steady encouragement, was felt most appreciatively by department colleagues. He was an 'idea person,' always ready with innovative or creative ideas."

After his retirement in 1992, Fisher was fully engaged in Seniors for Peace and in giving leadership to the JustPeace Seminar series, and continued to be an active participant in Mennonite writing conferences and local continuing education lectures. He was an active member of College Mennonite Church.

JANE FISHER '80, BOTANICAL ARTIST, EXHIBITS WORK IN LONDON

Jane Liechty Fisher '80 graduated from Goshen College with a degree in nursing. But after a successful nursing career, she became a botanical artist—a person who paints, sketches or otherwise illustrates plant life.

Fisher received a prestigious award at the Royal Horticultural Society (RHS) Botanical Art Show in London for her pencil drawings of field corn (above). She was among 27 botanical artists invited to exhibit work at the annual show in April.

Fisher, who lives in Saint Louis Park, Minnesota, is a member of the American Society of Botanical Artists. She has exhibited botanical art in Minnesota, Wisconsin, California, Massachusetts and Illinois.

"I have always appreciated art," she said. "Even though I never actually tried my hand at it until relatively recently, I feel like I had a very clear idea of how I wanted my work to look from the beginning."

Fisher first became interested in botanical art eight years ago after attending a botanical art exhibit in Minnesota. After taking some art classes, she became hooked on pencil drawing because of its convenience and simplicity.

In the last three years, Fisher has focused on drawing field corn.

"From an artistic standpoint, it was good for me to delve deeply into one subject," Fisher said. "I learned a whole lot about drawing from my many hours spent staring at ears of corn."

DEAN YODER '80 RESTORES CARAVAGGIO MASTERPIECE

Paintings conservator Dean Yoder '80 made his debut last June as the co-star in an unusual new exhibition at the Cleveland Museum of Art.

For 14 weeks, Yoder worked in the museum's highly visible Focus Gallery on the conservation of the museum's 1607 painting by Michelangelo Merisi da Caravaggio, "The Crucifixion of Saint Andrew" (above).

Visitors watched as Yoder used cotton swabs and a specially concocted solution to clean the painting, millimeter by millimeter. Conservation at the museum usually takes place out of sight in a laboratory on the institution's lower level, but Yoder worked at his easel in the Focus Gallery during working hours, just off the museum's central atrium.

A native of Cleveland Heights, Yoder ran his own conservation business in Cleveland for 24 years before joining the museum's staff in 2009.

"It's going to take some time, and I'll have to go slowly," said Yoder, 55, in June. "The ultimate goal for me is to make this painting find its full potential, aesthetically."

SOFIA SAMATAR '94
NAMED BEST NEW SCIENCE
FICTION WRITER

In August, California writer Sofia Samatar was awarded one of the top honors in science fiction writing: the John W. Campbell Award for best new science fiction or fantasy writer.

Samatar received the award at the World Science Fiction Convention for her debut novel, "A Stranger in Olondria" (Small Beer Press, 2013). The book also won the World Fantasy Award's novel of the year.

"A Stranger in Olondria" is the story of a pepper merchant's son who travels to a distant, book-rich land and becomes haunted by the ghost of an illiterate young girl. The novel explores themes of travel, exile and the conflict between oral and written ways of knowing.

Samatar wrote the book while teaching English in South Sudan and Egypt for 12 years, where she became proficient in Arabic.

"I do think there's a connection between my love for languages and my love for speculative fiction," said Samatar in an interview with tor.com. "Both of them ask you to dwell in uncertainty. And I love that. Uncertainty is home for me. It's the definitions that scare me."

Today, Samatar teaches world literature, African literature and Arabic at California State University Channel Islands in Camarillo, California. She also edits nonfiction and poetry for the online journal Interfictions.

CREATING SUSTAINABLE CHILD ABUSE CARE IN U.S. AND ABROAD

Dr. Aaron J. Miller '96 wants to put child abuse pediatricians out of a job. But there's a plot twist. He is one.

Miller is a board-certified general pediatric physician and a child abuse pediatrician who lives and works in the city of Compton, California. He splits his time between consulting for the L.A. County Department of Health Services and developing an international non-profit organization, BRANCH (Building Regional Alliances to Nurture Child Health, branchpartners.org), which works to develop medical, legal and social welfare systems to address child maltreatment in low-income countries.

In June 2013, Miller established BRANCH and formed a partnership with UNICEF, the Malawi government and additional funders to help set up 23 one-stop child abuse centers across Malawi.

One-stop child abuse centers are a relatively new model in developing countries. Instead of sending victims to the police, social workers, medical professions and magistrates separately, one-stop centers house all professionals in one building.

The motto at BRANCH is the same as Miller's personal life mission: to build regional alliances to nurture child health, to work to create safe, stable and nurturing relationships, and to empower community leaders in developing countries to achieve change.

"To be there for the children, to see them go from fear to hope," said Miller, "is exciting and incredibly gratifying."

GC ALUMNI BIKE FROM PARAGUAY TO GOSHEN

Across 13 countries and many cultural barriers, three Goshen College graduates found hospitality among South and Central American Anabaptist groups during an 11-month, 10,000-mile bicycle journey from Paraguay to Goshen.

For Michael Miller '13, Levi Smucker '13 and Abe Stucky '13, a pan-American journey came to an end last April.

Together with Matthew Helmuth '14, who joined the group for the first three months, the students made a dorm room dream into a reality. Sharing a love of cycling, their long-anticipated idea took shape after they enrolled in a three-week Anabaptist-Mennonite history class in Paraguay in May 2013, led by John D. Roth, professor of history.

The group spent most days of their 11-month journey biking, but also spent time working and serving. Miller and Stucky spent about six weeks at Hacienda Iltio near Cotopaxi National Park in Ecuador, where they volunteered through World Wide Opportunities on Organic Farms (WWOOF). Smucker spent three months volunteering with MAP Internacional Sección, a non-profit organization that works in community health and development around the world, based in Quito, Ecuador.

Much of the time was spent with hosts along the way, using connections from church, college and friends. But the group overwhelmingly relied on the support of strangers they met on the trail, along with a fair amount of camping.

Ways alumni can support Goshen College

We are thrilled that so many Goshen College alumni love their college, desire to stay connected and want to help encourage young people they know to consider attending. Below are some of the ways you as alumni can do this.

STAY CONNECTED:

- Visit the recently redesigned goshen.edu to learn about GC today.
- Sign up to receive daily news updates from the college in your inbox (goshen.edu/news/e-subscribe/).
- Make sure we have your current email address so you can receive the bi-monthly e-newsletter (contact alumni@goshen.edu)
- Visit our Facebook page, LIKE it, comment and share our posts with your networks (facebook.com/goshencollege). Or check out other GC social media options to stay connected with specific parts of campus, like athletics, music and academic departments (goshen.edu/com-mar/social-media-directory/).

ENGAGE WITH US:

- Attend Homecoming Weekend, held every October on campus, whether your class is meeting for its reunion or not. You are always welcome!
- Let us know what interesting things you are up to and your recent accomplishments for publishing in the Bulletin (email alumni@goshen.edu). Also, make sure that you let us know your children's names and information so that we can help them consider whether Goshen College is right for them when the time comes.
- For those living in the area, come out and cheer on the Maple Leaf Athletics (goleafs.net). For those not living in the area, listen to some of the games online on 91.1 The Globe, the college's radio station (globeradio.org).
- Attend a campus event in person or view live streaming music concerts online (goshen.edu/academics/music/livestream). Check out the campus calendar for all upcoming events (goshen.edu/calendar).

ASSIST WITH THE RECRUITMENT PROCESS:

- Pray regularly for our admission counselors on the road, prospective students traveling for a visit and for those making decisions at the college.
- Let us know of a student who has not heard of or considered Goshen College, but whom you think would value this learning experience and community. You can do so by completing this simple online form, providing us with basic contact information for the student (goshen.edu/alumni/resources/referral-form/).
- Encourage high school students you know to visit during one of our Explore Goshen Days held throughout the school year, or visit anytime on a custom individual visit (goshen.edu/visit).
- Direct prospective students (children, grandchildren, friends, youth at your church) to the admissions website for information on admission requirements, scholarship opportunities and more (goshen.edu/admissions).
- Organize a group to visit and bring them to campus. We encourage you to contact the Admissions Office and involve them in your planning process to make it an effective and meaningful visit.
- If you live in the local area, invite a high school student you know out for coffee at Java Junction (our on-campus student-run coffee shop) or to attend a campus event with you.

Goshen Flight #606

by JOE SPRINGER, curator, Mennonite Historical Library

On Nov. 28, 1979, over 300 people gathered in the year-old Umble Center for an international variety show entitled “Flight #606.” Guided by “pilot” Michael DeShield '80 and “stewardess” Brigitte Hudicourt '81, dances, songs and skits filled the “flight.” Both had found their way to Goshen through connections with Study-Service Term units in their home countries, Belize and Haiti.

This prototype of today’s annual International Student Coffeehouse tradition helped them and others to fulfill the one-hour Creative Expression graduation requirement. The show also exemplified lifelong commitments to savoring not only one’s native culture, but many cultures.

The flight “landed” in five different regions of the world. Final stop was Goshen where passengers and crew sang “Praise God from Whom All Blessings Flow,” sometimes referred to as the Mennonite anthem or 606.

Brigitte recalls Michael’s “extraordinary capacity” to break down barriers and get everyone involved. While preparing the show, she said, “Michael’s tolerance for people sometimes drove me up a wall.” Thirty-five years later, Brigitte still remembers that “looking at the GC body from the stage singing after our performance was very emotional and gave [the international students] a, not always obvious, feeling of belonging.”

Michael continued to demonstrate that zest for a world that involved everyone throughout his life. After Goshen, and marriage to classmate Miriam Stoltzfus '80, Michael studied in Australia and Scotland to prepare for a career in veterinary science. This work led him into roles with Belize’s Ministry of Agriculture and the Belize Agricultural Health Authority. As the country’s Director of Food Safety, he traveled throughout the world to participate in discussions of global food safety and the impact of genetically-modified foods. Even while battling the cancer that ended his life in 2011, his concern for global well-being took him to conferences in Italy and Brazil.

Winter is coming and now is the time to start planning to ensure a bright future for yourself and Goshen College. Planned giving offers you peace of mind and reflects your values as you joyfully share your bountiful harvest with others for many years to come.
